KUWAIT: The National Assembly decided yesterday to delay the grilling of Minister of Social Affairs and Labor Hind Al-Subaih to today's follow-up session. MP Saleh Ashour had filed an interpellation motion against the minister on issues related to privatizing cooperative societies and purported manipulation of financial allotments for orphans, Kuwait News Agency (KUNA) reported. Subaih is also Minister of State for Planning and Development.

Following the session, MP Abdullah Al-Turaiji announced intentions to file yet another grilling motion against Subaih tomorrow. The lawmaker accused the minister of 'failure to enforce the law' that penalizes those who hinder national unity, not being up to her position's responsibilities and having negative attitudes towards the Assembly.

Turaiji explained that the minister "stood still and did nothing" when a senior social affairs ministry official allegedly posted some 'racial comments' on his Twitter account. "Accordingly, we have to be up to the responsibilities stipulated in the constitution to avoid our silence being taken as an excuse for further violations," he stated.

On Ashour's grilling, Turaiji said that he would attempt to evaluate Subaih's arguments during the debate today before making his decision whether to support or oppose the grilling accordingly. "Regardless of the result of Ashour's motion, I am filing mine (tomorrow morning)," he emphasized.

Also during the session, the parliament approved the public prosecution's request to strip MP Abdulhameed Dashti of his parliamentary immunity.

B'DESH BANK CHIEF QUITS OVER $81M CYBER HEIST MAN IN MANILA GETS $30M CASH

DHAKA/MANILA: Bangladesh's central bank governor resigned yesterday over the theft of $81 million from the bank's US account, as details emerged in the Philippines that $30 million of the money was delivered in cash to a casino junket operator in Manila. The audacious cyber-theft has embarrassed the Bangladeshi government, triggered outrage in the impoverished country and raised alarm over the security of the country's foreign exchange reserves of over $28 billion. The rest of the money hackers stole from the Bangladesh Bank's account at the New York Federal Reserve, one of the largest cyber heists in history, went to two casinos, officials told a Philippines Senate hearing into the scandal.

They said a mix of dollars and Philippine pesos was sent by a foreign exchange broker to the ethnic Chinese junket operator over several days, a haul that would have been made up of at least 780,000 banknotes. Unknown hackers last month breached the computer systems of Bangladesh Bank and attempted to steal $951 million from its Fed account, which it uses for international settlements, but the bank's security systems and typing errors in some requests prevented the full theft. They managed to transfer $81 million to entities in the Philippines.

Bangladesh Bank officials have said there is little hope of apprehending the perpetrators and recovering the money would be difficult and could take months. In Dhaka, central bank governor Atiur Rahman said he had resigned to set an example in a country where there is little precedence of accountability and to uphold the image of the institution. The government also fired two deputy governors of the bank, Finance Minister Abul Maal Abdul Muhith said, days after blaming it for keeping the government in the dark about the theft.

Rahman, who held the bank's top post for seven years, told reporters he resigned voluntarily. "I submitted my resignation to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina ... tears rolled out from her two eyes," he said. Rahman's exit could be a blow to Bangladesh, a South Asian nation of 160 million. The country has been aspiring to reach middle-income status, and Rahman was seen as one of the driving forces helping Dhaka towards that goal. Under the former development economics professor, the country's foreign exchange reserves have increased fourfold to $28 billion and he also sought to ensure farmers and women entrepreneurs had better access to banking services and credit.

Rahman defended his record at the central bank, saying he was proud of his achievements there.

KNPC CLOSE TO $3BN LOAN TO PART-FUND REFINERIES' REVAMP

DUBAI: Kuwait National Petroleum Company (KNPC) expects to close the first phase of funding for its multibillion-dollar Clean Fuels Project with local banks as soon as the first week of April, the state oil refiner told Kuwait News Agency yesterday. Part of the country's KD 30 billion ($100 billion) economic development plan, the Clean Fuels Project will upgrade and expand two of the Gulf Arab state's largest existing refineries with a focus on producing higher-value products such as diesel and kerosene for export.

KNPC was in advanced talks with local conventional and Islamic banks to secure a KD 900 million loan of 10 years duration, Chief Executive Mohammed Al-Mutairi was quoted as saying in a statement to the state news agency. National Bank of Kuwait and Kuwait Finance House were helping to arrange this part of the funding, the statement said. Negotiations were also underway to secure further financing from international banks which would be guaranteed by the export credit agencies of South Korea, Japan, Britain, Italy and the Netherlands.

No figure for this portion was given, but the statement said the expected completion of talks was scheduled later this year. Sources told Reuters in April 2015 that KNPC was in talks with banks to raise as much as $10 billion for a period between seven and 10 years to fund around 70 percent of the total project cost.

MOSCOW: The first of Russia's warplanes to leave Syria received a hero's welcome back home yesterday, starting a surprise withdrawal the West hopes could boost peace talks by pressuring Damascus. Despite the initial pullout, a monitoring group said Russian helicopters - and likely warplanes - which are still in Syria had pounded Islamic State group positions as regime troops pressed an advance. UN peace envoy Staffan de Mistura described the withdrawal announcement as a "significant development" for negotiations that began in Geneva on Monday in the latest push to end the brutal conflict as it enters its sixth year. "We hope (this) will have a positive impact on the progress of the negotiations," he said in a statement.

President Vladimir Putin on Monday ordered the "main part" of Russia's forces out of the war-torn nation, but the Kremlin denied it was trying to pressure its long-time ally President Bashar Al-Assad. Russia will, however, keep a contingent at its air and naval bases in Syria and a senior official said strikes against "terrorist targets" would continue.

1503 SHIPWRECK FOUND OFF OMAN

Divers excavate the wreck site of Portuguese explorer Vasco da Gama's ship Esmeralda, which sank in a storm in May 1503 off the coast of Al Hallaniyah island in Oman's Dhofar region. — AP

DUBAI: The 500-year-old wreckage of Portuguese ship piloted by an uncle of explorer Vasco da Gama has been found off the coast of Oman, archaeologists said yesterday, a discovery that included the recovery of an incredibly rare coin. The Esmeralda sank during a violent storm near Al-Hallaniyah Island in the Indian Ocean in May 1503, killing commander Vicente Sodre and all those aboard.

Beginning in 2013, a team from the British company Blue Water Recoveries and the Oman Ministry of Heritage and Culture explored a site in the island's Ghubbat ar Rahib Bay. They later determined the debris found there came from the longmissing ship, one of two lost in the storm from da Gama's second voyage to India. Among the stone shot, ceramics, a bell and other debris, divers discovered an incredibly rare silver coin called an Indio, of which only one other is known to exist today, said David L Mearns, the director of Blue Water Recoveries. The coins were forged in 1499 after da Gama's first voyage to India, which helps date the wreckage, he said.

KUWAIT CONDONES POLITICAL SOLUTION IN SYRIA: DIPLOMAT

GENEVA: The debacle in Syria will not peter out in the absence of a decisive political solution that would reinstall peace and stability in the country, said a Kuwaiti diplomat yesterday. Addressing the UN Human Rights Council, Kuwait's delegate to the UN in this city, Ambassador Jamal Al-Ghunaim, said Kuwait was appreciative of the work of the UN-sponsored fact-finding commission in Syria and shared with it its anxiety over the rampant arrests of civilians, forced disappearances, and the kidnapping of children to be conscripted to armed gangs of fighters. He stressed the conviction that Kuwait condemned all violations of human rights in Syria as stated by a report from the commission, saying that Kuwait was committed to the unity and sovereignty of Syria.

Kuwait, he said, has launched numerous undertakings to bring international humanitarian support to the Syrian people, culminating in hosting four donors conferences, three of which took place in Kuwait. Up to $17 billion were pledged at the donors conferences, Kuwait paying so far $1.3 billion of the pledged amount, said Ghunaim, noting that His Highness the Amir of Kuwait Sheikh Sabah Al-Ahmad Al-Jaber Al-Sabah brought attention to the fact that Syrian refugees ought to have access to health care and proper education. — KUNA

KUWAIT: The 2nd Kuwait Food Safety Conference (KFSC) kicked off yesterday with the participation of several international experts and specialists in the field. The conference coincides with the start of implementing stipulations of the Sustainable Development Summit, held at the UN headquarters in September 2015, Ministry of Health Assistant Undersecretary for Public Health Affairs Dr Majda Al-Qattan said in an opening speech. She hoped the conference would come up with significant recommendations concerning the development and updating of policies and procedures to counter challenges facing food safety.

Meanwhile, deputy head of Administration of Food and Nutrition at the Ministry Dr Nawal Al-Hamad, said that the conference targets the core issue of food safety in Kuwait. She noted that the Administration is tasked with monitoring and following up on procedures to guarantee safety of food in the country, especially through spreading awareness.

Dr Hamad pointed to the dangerous consequences of consuming high level of sodium and saturated fat in proceed food, such as in hotdogs, noting that specific terms should be placed to regulate entry of these products. The event will be associated with a large fair of Kuwait's major companies specialized in nutrition, in addition to a pavilion for the best awareness design on food safety.—KUNA

الأنياء Al-Anbaa DO I ELECT AN INFIDEL?

By Saleh Al-Shayji

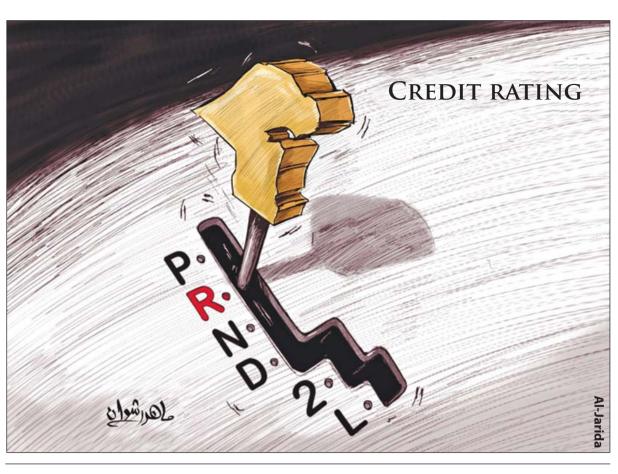

he little noise seems loud in front of the big silence. A few speak and many hear them, and many keep silent and no one feels their presence as if they do not exist. This is the truth with regret and more regret is that those who cause the noise are mostly rogues or holders of a certain purpose, and their noise does not represent the public's interest.

It is very clear that there is a lack and inability of understanding those who cause the noise, who get angry and shout over something they did not understand in its reality. This is what is known as the policy of the herd, which makes the sound, and goes right or left, while at the same time no one takes a different direction from this herd. During one of the voting seasons, I asked a young university graduate, who I thought had enough understanding and awareness, and I thought that he was going to vote for a candidate who has open thinking - I asked him for whom are you going to vote? He surprised me with a name of a candidate from a faction that is opposite to free ideology!

I told him why do not you vote for so or so who has an open ideology and knows parliamentary work with its correct methods? His answer was a shock for me when he said: I will not elect him because he is a liberal! I asked him: Is him being a liberal keeping you from voting for him? He looked at me with wonderment and said: Do you want to elect an infidel?

The lack of awareness and understanding has become a general trait, especially among the youth group, which with regret, did not work on building itself or its brains - rather it gave its reins to the society to carry out this superficial and distorted upbringing and this fragile building. Many times we find angry people claiming that they are defending their beliefs, which they think was insulted because of what so and so said, although there is nothing offensive towards what they believe in, but the superficiality of understanding and absence of awareness are what made them believe this. We are living a case of instinctive spontaneous reaction condition, like the physical reactions the human being cannot control, but the brain reactions must happen as a result of understanding and awareness, not as a result of emotion, absence of awareness and unavailable understanding.

GENDER IDENTITY DISORDERS, DEPRESSION SPREADING AMONG STUDENTS: SPECIALISTS

KUWAIT: Academic and psychiatric specialists warned against the increasing cases of chronic psychological problems in schools, adding that the specialized psychiatric department at the Education Ministry receives more than 600 cases from all educational stages each year that are difficult to treat inside the school.

They said that most common cases at schools include gender identity disorders, suicide attempts caused by depression and violence, and warned about the appearance of satanic worship cases, even though they are only a few cases, as students resort to it out of imitation, and the reason is social media. They said school administrations are main partners in solving students' problems and efforts must be consolidated with these researchers to reach the sought after goals to build a good citizen who serves the country.

WHAT'S COMMON BETWEEN TRUMP AND GADDAFI

By Sami Al-Nisf

uammar Gaddafi was dubbed worldwide as an impulsive and crazy unpredictable leader in order to explain all the contradictions and atrocities he committed during his reign, including killing, squandering, looting his people's wealth, claiming to be pro-Arab unity and actually working against it and using slogans of defending the Palestinian cause while killing Palestinian people and leaders, depending on the fact that Arab peoples could be easily beguiled and believe what they hear more than what they actually see. Nobody ever wondered how such a lunatic could maintain his 'throne' for 42 consecutive years, ruling over a people that never accept injustice!

The US' debts are close to $15 trillion and it will be very difficult for any sane US ruler to pay the interests on this unprecedented historic debt, not to mention the debt value itself. Therefore, it would be very useful that some intelligent US minds promote the idea that presidential candidate Donald Trump is an impulsive, unstable and unpredictable person and that even if he makes it to the presidency, he might make some 'insane' decisions to pay off that astronomical debt by using old colonial power principles and ideas to impose an annual tribute on GCC states, Japan, Germany, Korea and others in return for US protection. He will also impose up to 35 percent taxes on the products of China, industrial countries and Mexico to pay off the debt and reduce the dangerous deficit, and thus his country would flourish at the expense of destroying other world countries. All this has previously been mentioned during Trump's election campaign.

So far, results of surveys show that Trump is inevitably coming to the White House, which would mean putting his insane promises into practice. Therefore, afflicted world countries and its lobbies within the US should use all possible and legal means in American political life to prevent Trump from winning, because his win will be very devastating, because he would rule the mightiest country in the history of mankind with all its conventional and non-conventional weapons and Trump would never hesitate to use the latter with the first provocation or major crisis...who knows?!!

Finally, there is a lack of likeness between Trump and traditional politicians including Democrats and Republicans, namely those in the Senate, of which only two thirds can depose him if he ever commits fatal mistakes as president. So, will this scenario come true? Who knows!

KUWAIT: Kuwait Petroleum Corporation's (KPC) executive administration resumed meeting with various oil companies to acquaint its employees about initiatives that would help cut expenses as well as stop the uncontrolled growth of payroll in the coming five years. In this regard, wellinformed official oil sources said that KPC's initiatives aim at saving KD 190 million yearly, adding that oil sector payroll costs would jump from KD 1.5 billion to KD 2.3 billon within five years.

The sources explained that KPC met managers and heads of teams and officials at Kuwait National Petroleum Company (KNPC), Kuwait Oil Company (KOC) and the Petrochemical Industry Company (PIC), and discussed suspending bonuses while in service and on termination, in addition to reducing flight tickets for senior officials and regulating daily travel allowances to KD 220 a day for senior officials travelling worldwide and KD 180 a day for other officials travelling to any country. The sources also explained that the austerity measures also include rationalizing overseas training courses, downgrading flight tickets and reducing daily allowances as per the KPC's board decision issued on Feb 1, 2016. The measures also include suspending the spring camp and paying parts of club and spa subscription fees.

As far as expat employees are concerned, the source explained that KPC decided turning expat administrative staffs to work through contractors in order to reduce the cost of salaries and incentives they get. The sources added that the measures would also include comprehensive reconsideration of the incentives and privileges non-Kuwaiti staff receive, such as tuition fees, rent allowance, flight tickets and medical services.

KPC CEO Nizar Al-Adasani said that KPC's financial reforms aim at allowing the private sector and citizens to play larger roles in bidding for and co-owning oil service activities. He added that a special schedule was being prepared to launch and privatize 42 petrol stations. He also expected that the initiatives offered by KPC would help maintain payroll costs at KD 1.5 billion. — Al-Anbaa

THOUSANDS OF MAIDS IN HONG KONG ARE IN 'FORCED LABOR'

HONG KONG: Tens of thousands of foreign maids in Hong Kong are in "forced labor", according to a new report that fuels growing criticism of the city's treatment of its army of domestic workers. The study by the Justice Centre estimates that one in six, or 50,000 of Hong Kong's more than 300,000 migrant domestic workers-mainly from Indonesia and the Philippines-fell into the "forced labor" cate-

Its findings come after a report by the UN Committee Against Torture in December urged Hong Kong authorities to reform laws in order to protect victims of forced labor and trafficking. The plight of the city's domestic workers was also thrown into the international spotlight by the high-profile abuse case of Indonesian maid Erwiana Sulistyaningsih, whose Hong Kong employer received a six-year jail sentence last year. The new report defined forced labor as employment for which the worker had not been recruited freely, was not doing the job freely, or could not walk away from work.

Fourteen percent of those in forced labor had been trafficked into the city, it said. "Hong Kong must come clean and acknowledge these problems. It can no longer afford to sweep them under the carpet," said Piya Muqit, executive director of Justice Centre, a non-profit rights group. "Current regulations can actually increase the vulnerability of workers to exploitation and victims face very real barriers in seeking assistance and justice," she said. Debt incurred by unscrupulous employment agencies both in Hong Kong and the workers' home countries also played a major role in trapping workers in their jobs, the report found.

"Forced labor does not always involve physical violence, there are many tools of coercion and deception," said Victoria Wisniewski Otero, co-author of the study that interviewed more than 1,000 workers. One Indonesian maid named as Indah told researchers she felt she had no choice but to continue working because of the debt she had incurred. She also said she had no access to her passport, which was being held by her employer. The study found migrant domestic laborers worked an average 70-hour week and more than a third

an employment contract must also be scrapped, it said. "The government will have to be pushed and pulled into doing something," said legislator Emily Lau, head of Hong Kong's

CAR BOMB KILLS DRIVER IN BERLIN

BERLIN: A car bomb killed a driver travelling down a street in central Berlin yesterday, police said, as investigators suspected that it was likely a case of homicide. 'OMAR THE CHECHEN': NOTORIOUS, RED-BEARDED IS WARLORD with roots in Georgia and a thick red beard, Omar Al-Shishani was one of the most notorious faces of the Islamic State jihadist group. On Monday, the Pentagon confirmed that Shishani-whose real name is Tarkhan Batirashvili-died after being wounded in a US-led coalition strike in northeastern Syria earlier this month. US officials previously said Shishani "likely died" in the strike, but reports surfaced that he had survived. On Monday, Navy Captain Jeff Davis, a Pentagon spokesman, told AFP the US military now believed "he subsequently died of his injuries" following the strike.

Shishani, whose nom de guerre means Omar the Chechen, was one of the IS leaders most wanted by Washington which put a $5 million bounty on his head. US officials had branded Shishani the "equivalent of the secretary of defense" for the jihadist group. Shishani came from the ex-Soviet state of Georgia's Pankisi Gorge region, which is populated mainly by ethnic Chechens. He fought as a Chechen rebel BEIRUT: A fierce, battle-hardened warlord against Russian forces before joining the supporter and posted online described him Georgian military in 2006, and fought Russian forces again in Georgia in 2008. He resurfaced in northern Syria in 2012 as the leader of a battalion of foreign fighters, said Aymenn Jawad Al-Tamimi, research fellow at the Middle East Forum, a US think-tank.

> As early as May 2013, when IS was just emerging in Syria, he was appointed the group's military commander for the north of the country, Tamimi said. While Shishani's exact rank was unclear, Richard Barrett of the US-based Soufan Group described him as IS's "most senior military commander", adding that he had been in charge of key battles. "He is clearly a very capable commander and has the loyalty of Chechen fighters who are considered by ISIS as elite troops," Barrett said, using another acronym for IS. Shishani was not however a member of IS's political leadership, a structure that is even murkier than its military command.

A profile of Shishani written by an IS as "one of the best strategic and tactical leaders". He was born in 1986 to a Christian father and a Muslim mother, according to the text, which claims he "never lost any of his battles". In an indication of Shishani's popularity among jihadist sympathizers, the text describes him as "the new Khalid Ibn al-Walid"-a reference to a leader from the early days of Islam who played a crucial role in spreading the nascent religion in Syria and Iraq.

Observers, however, downplayed Shishani's importance. "He was a fierce fighter," according to Rami Abdel Rahman, director of the Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, which monitors the Syrian conflict. "He would be sent to frontlines across IS-held territory," he said. Still, Abdel Rahman said the impact of Shishani's death would be minimal. "It won't have an actual impact on the battlefield. There are many other leaders," he said. "IS chooses which faces to make known in the media-while it conceals the real leaders."— AFP

CLASHES SPREAD TO NEW AREAS OF SOUTHEAST TURKEY AFTER ATTACKS 45 MILITANTS KILLED IN IRAQ AIR STRIKES

DIYARBAKIR: Four people were killed in clashes between security forces and Kurdish militants vesterday, security sources said, as fighting widened in southeast Turkey following a suicide bombing that killed 37 people in the capital Ankara. Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK) fighters blocked roads and halted vehicles in the Kaynartepe neighborhood of the city of Diyarbakir and clashed with security forces sporadically through the night as a police helicopter flew overhead, witnesses said.

No one has claimed responsibility for Sunday's car bomb that tore through a crowded transport hub in Ankara, but security officials have said it involved two militants, one of them female, from the outlawed Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK). Violence has surged in mainly Kurdish southeast Turkey since a 2-1/2 year PKK ceasefire collapsed in July. The militants have focused their strikes on security forces in southeastern towns, some of which have been under curfew.

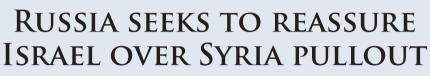

One police officer and three militants were killed in the fighting in the Baglar district of the southeastern city of Diyarbakir, the security sources said. A curfew was imposed in Baglar's Kaynartepe neighborhood from 3 am after moves by militants to set up barricades, dig ditches and plant explosives, authorities said. The curfew was later widened to encompass more city streets as clashes continued in the morning. Gunfire and explosions rang out across the city and police in armored vehicles parked on street corners called for people to stay inside. Conflict in Diyarbakir, the southeast's largest city, has until now has been focused in the Sur district, parts of which have been devastated by the fighting.

Air strikes

Following the Ankara bombing, the Turkish military launched air strikes on Monday and struck northern Iraq's Qandil mountain area where the PKK's main bases are. The military said 45 PKK militants were believed to have been killed. The strikes by F-16 and F-4 jets destroyed two weapons depots and two Katyusha rocket positions, the military said in a statement. The conflict has also fuelled political tensions, with President Tayvip Erdogan repeatedly calling for lawmakers from the pro-Kurdish Peoples' Democratic Party (HDP) to face prosecution, accusing them of being an extension of the PKK.

The PKK, which says it is fighting for autonomy for Kurds, is designated a terrorist group by Turkey, the United States and the European Union. Speaking on Monday evening, Erdogan said the definition of terrorist needed to be broadened to include supporters. "It may be the terrorist who detonates bombs and pulls the trigger, but it is these supporters who enable them to achieve their goals," he said in a speech. "Being an MP, an academic, journalist, writer or civil society group executive does not change the reality of that person being a terrorist," he said. — Reuters

JERUSALEM: A Russian diplomat sought to reassure Israel yesterday that its security would not be harmed by the winding down of Moscow's intervention in the Syrian civil war, but Israel's armed forces chief said the ramifications were not yet clear. Israeli officials have privately said Russian forces sent in last year to help Syrian President Bashar Assad turn the tide against a now five-year-old rebellion also served to restrain his anti-Israeli allies - Iran and Lebanon's Hezbollah militia.

Israel was further helped by a hotline to the main Russian airbase at Hmeymim in Syrai, which let it continue covert strikes to foil suspected Hezbollah or Iranian operations against it on Syrian turf without fear of accidentally clashing with Moscow. Russia blindsided world powers on Monday by announcing that the main part of its forces in Syria would start to withdraw. Russia's deputy ambassador to Israel on Tuesday described the two countries' Syria coordination as remaining intact.

"We will try to ensure that this (Syria) crisis is resolved, and we will also do everything so that Israel's national security interests are not harmed in the process," the envoy, Alexey Drobinin, told the Ynet news site, without elaborating. In separate remarks to Israel's Army Radio, Drobinin said Russia would maintain its military presence at Hmeymim airbase as well as a Mediterranean naval centre at Tartus. "Israel is a neighboring country. It cannot be indifferent to what is happening in Syria. We take this into account, of course," he said. "We have an ongoing dialogue with the Israeli side on all levels - the military level and diplomatic level." Israel has occasionally fired across the ments. — Reuters

Golan Heights in response to spillover shelling or bombed advanced arms it suspected were to be transferred to Assad's Lebanese guerrilla allies, Hezbollah. Past Israeli strikes in Syria killed Syrian troops as well as Hezbollah fighters, according to both countries and the guerrilla group though the exact number remains unclear. Israeli President Reuven Rivlin was due to meet Russian President Vladimir Putin in Moscow today. Drobinin said that would be "a very good opportunity to air opinions and provide answers for any questions the Israeli side might have".

Rivlin's role is largely ceremonial. His Russia trip was set before the Syrian withdrawal announcement. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government declined to be drawn on the issue. But the Israeli armed forces chief, Lieutenant-General Gadi Eizencot, told lawmakers Israel had no advance knowledge of Russia's pullback plan, whose impact he deemed hard to gauge. "At this stage, humility and caution are required in trying to understand the vector in which the Syrian theatre will develop with the exit of Russian forces." Eizencot said in the closeddoor briefing, according to a parliamentary spokesman.

Eizencot said that the Russian intervention had so far strengthened Assad's position in ceasefire talks with rebels. Israel has voiced doubt about the truce prospects in Syria, which it anticipates will end up partitioned on sectarian lines. Eizencot predicted that the Russian withdrawal would be carried out gradually, but not fully, with Moscow maintaining two bases in Syria while thinning out overall troop deploy-

A LOOK AT THE COST OF 5-YEAR SYRIA CONFLICT

s the war in Syria enters its sixth year with no clear end in sight, here is a glance on what has been the cost of the war:

Dead and wounded

There are no reliably precise statistics on the number of people killed in Syria's war due to an inability to monitor on the ground. According to the UN, over 250,000 people have been killed and well over a million wounded. But officials acknowledge that figure has not been updated in months. The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, a Britain-based opposition group that monitors the war, puts the death toll at more than 270,000, while a recent report by the Syrian Center for Policy Research, an independent think tank, said 470,000 deaths have been caused by the conflict, either directly or indirectly.

The displaced

Almost half of Syria's prewar population of 23 million has been displaced by the war. The UN refugee agency says there are 6.5 million displaced within Syria and 4.8 million refugees outside Syria. Much of the remaining population is in dire need of humanitarian assistance. The refugees have mostly fled to neighboring countries - Jordan, Turkey, Lebanon and Iraq - and have flooded Europe, where most arrive after a treacherous sea journey from Turkey.

The cities

Historic Aleppo, Syria's largest city and former commercial center, has been devastated. Its ancient souks and the famed Umayyad Mosque complex have been trashed, its 11th century minaret toppled. The city of Homs, Syria's third largest, lies in ruins, entire blocks reduced to rubble or uninhabitable husks of housing. Rebel-held towns around the capital of Damascus such as Jobar, Douma and Harasta are now a vista of collapsed buildings and rubble. A preliminary World Bank-led assessment in six cities in Syria - Aleppo, Daraa, Hama, Homs, Idlib, and Latakia - released in January showed an estimated $3.6-4.5 billion in damage as of the end of 2014.

Lost heritage

Almost all of Syria's UNESCO World Heritage sites have been either damaged or destroyed, including Aleppo in the north, the ancient town of Bosra in the south, the Crac des Chevaliers one of the most important preserved medieval castles in the world - and the Palmyra archaeological site. Some have been damaged by fighting and shelling, others intentionally blown up or pillaged. The Islamic State group, which took control of Palmyra last year, destroyed many of its Roman-era relics, including the 2000-year-old Temple of Bel and the iconic Arch of Triumph. Numerous archaeological sites in Syria are being systematically targeted for excavation by criminals and armed groups. These include the Apamea archaeological site in Hama, the Tell Merdikh archaeological site in the Idlib region, and the Dura-Europos and Mari sites in Deir el-Zour.

Economy

There is no accurate estimate for the economic cost of the ongoing war. A recent report by the charity group World Vision and the consultant group Frontier Economics estimated that the conflict has so far cost Syria $275 billion in lost growth opportunities - 150 times more than pre-war Syria's health budget. If the conflict ends in 2020, the cost of the conflict will grow to $1.3 trillion, it estimated. A World Bank report estimates the damage to the capital stock in Syria as of mid-2014 to be $70-80 billion. The situation has deteriorated greatly since then.

The costs to others

Turkey, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq have borne the brunt of the economic impact of the war. Already in fragile situations, many of them are facing tremendous budgetary pressure. The World Bank estimates, for instance, that the influx of more than 630,000 Syrian refugees has cost Jordan over $2.5 billion a year. This amounts to 6 percent of GDP and one-fourth of government's annual revenue. Cash-strapped Lebanon is also stretched to a breaking point and Turkey says it can no longer afford to take in refugees. — AP

CHIEF NEGOTIATORS AT SYRIA TALKS ARE POLAR OPPOSITES

BEIRUT: One is a seasoned, multi-lingual diplomat, the other a relatively unknown rebel figure and student of Islam: the two men heading rival delegations at Syrian peace talks seem worlds apart. The respective differences between government diplomat Bashar Al-Jaafari and the opposition High Negotiations Committee's chief negotiator Mohammed Alloush in many ways mirror the vast gulf between the two sides at the talks. The pair are in Geneva, Switzerland for the latest UN-brokered talks after the last round collapsed in February.

Jaafari: Hawkish diplomat has been Syria's permanent envoy to the United Nations for nearly a decade. For many,

he is the public face of a regime that has become an international pariah, lambasted by rights groups and the West. An unequivocal and sharp-tongued defender of the embattled government, he is now tasked with making concessions at the peace talks. "We are here to conduct indirect talks among Syrians without preconditions and without foreign intervention," Jaafari told reporters at the last round of talks. Born in 1956, Jaafari hails from Damascus and belongs to the same Alawite religious

He holds degrees in French literature and translation, and a doctorate in political science from the Sorbonne University in Paris. As well as his native Arabic, he is also fluent in English and Persian. Jaafari's first diplomatic posting was in Paris, later moving to positions in New York and Indonesia. Since Syria's conflict

began in March 2011 with anti-government protests, Jaafari has repeatedly deflected sharp criticism of Damascus at the UN. He has doggedly rejected allegations of rights abuses

by the regime, including accusations of chemical weapons use in 2013 and well-documented the UN's "baseless accusations" in 2014, a Qatari official described him as "delusional". "His myopic and unquestioning analysis of the situation in Syria makes him difficult to engage

UN Security Council diplomat. "His argumentative performances in the Council do little to challenge the perception that he is less of a minority as President Bashar al-Assad.

Jaafari is a tall, silver-haired diplomat who ed to a 40-kilometre (25 mile) travel radius around New York city where the UN headquarters are based. Jaafari, who is married to an Iranian, wears his thin glasses low on his slender nose and a neatly trimmed goatee. "People in Damascus have nicknamed him 'the lion of diplomacy' for his tough positions against his counterparts from the Gulf," a journalist with years of experience in Damascus said. "He's a ruthless negotiator, and he understands very well what happens backstage at the UN."

Alloush: rebel in suit

Jaafari's opposite number Alloush, the HNC's chief negotiator, could hardly be more different. Nearly 15 years younger, he was born in Douma, a besieged town east of Damascus subject to regular government bombardment that has killed hundreds. A Sunni Muslim, Alloush studied Islamic jurisprudence in Saudi Arabia, making him relatively unknown even in his hometown. One Douma resident told AFP that "no one here knows him". Alloush is a leading political member of Jaish al-Islam (the Army of Islam), the most powerful rebel faction in the Eastern Ghouta region where Douma is located.

His prominent role within the HNC has boosted the body's legitimacy among rebels on the ground, who have previously derided the opposition-in-exile as nothing more than suits in hotels. Alloush is the cousin of slain Jaish al-Islam head Zahran Alloush, killed in an air strike claimed by Syria's government in December. An official biography provided by Jaish al-Islam to AFP says Mohammed has years of political-but not fighting-experience in the group. Physically, Alloush is also Jaafari's opposite, sporting a beard on a rosy-cheeked face and a reserved demeanor.

Alloush is new to the corridors of the UN, and his appointment as the HNC's chief negotiator has been controversial. The HNC includes leading former politicians like Riad Hijab, who defected from his post as prime minister in 2012, and Riad Naasan Agha, a former culture minister. Opposition members have criticized Jaish al-Islam for its alleged involvement in kidnapping prominent rights activists in Douma. Some activists speculated that Alloush was chosen to provoke the regime and to "spite Russia because of the death of Zahran Alloush," a rebel source said. "It will also very much embarrass the regime when they sit with him, because for five years they've been saying that Jaish al-Islam are terrorists that shell Damascus-so how can they sit with a terrorist?" he added. — AFP

US ELECTION CAMPAIGN: A SLUG FEST LIKE NO OTHER

WASHINGTON: In America, these are days of rage, fueled by a cocktail of gripes making for a White House race that's been wild and raunchy. Fist fights between opposing sides are now breaking out at rallies, where people give each other the finger. Candidates openly call each other liars, among other insults. Accusations of racism and bigotry have tainted the campaign trail. One hopeful-brash Republican frontrunner Donald Trump, of course-has even boasted in veiled fashion about the size of his genitalia. "This would all be fun if it weren't so serious," said Patrick Haney, a professor of political science at Miami University of Ohio.

Thanks in part to the gnawing sensation that the so-called "American dream" the idea that if you work hard, you will get ahead-is dead or comatose, it is the year of the outsider: the candidate claiming to be utterly free of the dysfunction of Washington-style, nothing-gets-done politics. "There is a sort of fundamental level of irritability in the American electorate right now. Some of it is probably economic and some of it is social and cultural," said Haney.

Paul Beck, a political scientist at Ohio State University, said the national funk cuts across party lines and to some extent stems from dissatisfaction with the status quo. "The other thing is much more deeply seated and that really goes back decades, to the declining status of the middle class," Beck said. Expressed in numbers, it looks like this: in 1970, 62 percent of aggregate. US income went to middle-income households. But in 2014, that figure was down to 43 percent, according to the Pew Research Center. This means the other ends of the income spectrum-the poor and the rich are getting bigger.

'American Rage'

Another poll, entitled "American Rage" and published in January by Esquire magazine, gave even grimmer numbers. It found 52 percent of those polled say the American dream is dead, and 54 percent believe they are worse off than they thought they would be when they were younger. "We the people are pissed. And the body politic is burning up," the magazine wrote in an introduction to the polling data. On another hot-button issueimmigration-Esquire said 46 percent of those polled feel immigrants are a burden because they take US jobs, housing and health care. Trump has tapped into these fears, vowing to deport immigrants here illegally, build a wall along the border with Mexico and institute a blanket ban on Muslims entering the country.

Critics have heaped scorn on the 69-yearold businessman, saying he is fueling hatred and racism. Rival John Kasich, the Republican governor of Ohio, says Trump has created a "very toxic atmosphere." Another Republican contender, Marco Rubio, called his language "dangerous." Even President Barack Obamathe target of much of the anger expressed by Trump supporters-has weighed in, condemning the "divisiveness along the lines of race and faith" seen on the campaign trail. Trump says his rallies are nothing but a "love fest." And among the four remaining Republican candidates, he leads by a wide margin.

Trump, the man hogging the headlines, is a billionaire who has never held public office and is widely ridiculed by critics as a bigoted, clownish blowhard. His party is described as cringing over the prospect that he will actually win the Republican nomination, which for his critics borders on handing over the election to the Democrats on a silver platter. —AFP

MASS MURDERER SUES NORWAY OVER 'INHUMAN' PRISON LIFE

Breivik makes Nazi salute, ignoring lawyer's advice

SKIEN: Mass killer Anders Behring Breivik opened a court case against Norway yesterday with a Nazi salute as his lawyers prepared to argue he has received inhuman treatment by being kept in isolation for murdering 77 people in 2011. Appearing in public for the first time since he was sentenced in 2012, Breivik has had just one visitor with whom he had physical contact - his mother, who was allowed into prison and gave him a hug shortly before she died of cancer in 2013. Clean-shaven and wearing a black suit, white shirt and golden tie, Breivik raised his right arm in a flat-handed Nazi salute on arrival at the court, slightly different from the outstretched arm and clenched fist he used in 2012.

Breivik's lawyer accused Norway of violating a ban on "inhuman and degrading treatment" under the European Convention on Human Rights by keeping the 37-year-old isolated from other inmates in a special threeroom cell. "There is no tradition in Norway for this type of isolation," lawyer Oeystein Storrvik told the special court that will meet until Friday in a gymnasium at Skien jail about 100 km (60 miles) south of Oslo. Storrvik told Reuters he had advised Breivik against making the Nazi salute. "He (Breivik) says he is a national socialist," he said, adding that making the gesture was "the worst thing you can do in a courtroom."

Norway rejects the charges of inhuman treatment. "Breivik is a very dangerous man," said Marius Emberland, the lawyer representing the state, defending Breivik's conditions. He said another prisoner tried to attack Breivik last year, getting to within earshot. When stopped by guards, the man shouted: "You are a killer, a child killer ... And I love my country," Emberland said. Breivik killed eight people with a bomb in Oslo and gunned down 69 others on an island nearby, many of them teenagers. He is serving Norway's maximum sentence of 21 years, which can be extended.

Breivik will have a chance to speak today. The single judge - there is no jury - will issue a ruling in coming weeks. Norway considered it too dangerous to hear the case in Oslo. The makeshift courtroom has walls lined with timber bars and a climbing frame as well as two basketball hoops.

Some survivors watched the trial in an Oslo court with a direct transmission by television. Most stayed away, not wanting to revive memories of July 22, 2011. — Reuters

CYPRUS THREATENS TO BLOCK EU-TURKEY MIGRANT DEAL

NICOSIA: Cyprus yesterday threatened to derail a proposed EU deal with Turkey to curb the flow of migrants to Europe, insisting on longstanding demands including that Ankara recognize its government. "Cyprus does not intend to consent to the opening of any new chapters if Turkey does not fulfill its obligations," Cypriot President Nicos Anastasiades said after talks with EU president Donald Tusk.

EU and Turkish leaders agreed last week to a tentative proposal including the return of migrants landing in Greece and a "one-for-one" swap of Syrian refugees. Cyprus has expressed reservations, not least as its longtime adversary Turkey expects the accord to lead to the opening of new chapters in Ankara's longstanding EU membership bid and to ease visa requirements in Europe's passportfree Schengen area.

Anastasiades said Cyprus would not accept "the Turkish demands without (the) implementation of Turkey's longpending obligations" in its EU membership bid. Tusk, who heads to Ankara for talks ahead of negotiations on the EU-Turkey proposal, admitted "we are not ment of Cyprus and Nicosia has blocked there yet" in terms of a deal. "The Turkish proposal... still needs to be rebalanced so as to be accepted by all 28 member states and the EU institutions," he told reporters. The plan to expel migrants en masse from Greece has sparked international criticism, with the UN's top officials on refugees and human rights questioning whether it would be legal.

Officials have also expressed concern over the potential need for compromise with Ankara, as fears grow over freedom of expression and rights abuses under President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. "One of the issues to be sorted out is the key question of legality," Tusk said. A Cypriot refusal of the migrant-swap deal would effectively block the largest diplomatic push yet to ease Europe's burden of accommodating hundreds of thousands of refugees, many of whom enter the EU through Turkey. The island of Cyprus has been divided since 1974 when Turkish troops invaded its northern sector in response to an Athens-engineered coup attempt.

Turkey does not recognize the govern-six key chapters of Ankara's negotiations for EU membership since 2009, effectively halting the process. Cyprus insists Turkey must first meet its longstanding demands for recognition, and to open up trade ties, ports and airports. Complicating matters further is a UN-backed negotiation process between Greek and Turkish Cypriot administrations aimed at reuniting the island. European sources say EU officials admit that they took the wrong approach to Cyprus's concerns, which were overlooked in the enthusiasm among members states for a deal.

At one point last week in Brussels, Anastasiades was involved in a heated confrontation with five key European figures, including German Chancellor Angela Merkel, in which he came under heavy pressure to back the accord, sources said. Germany registered a record influx of asylum seekers that reached 1.1 million in 2015. Tusk's Cyprus visit was arranged at the last minute-a sign of Brussel's realization that a new approach is needed. "I am not here to exert pressure on Cyprus," the EU president told reporters. "I am here to listen to your position." — AFP

QAEDA GUNMEN DRANK BEER IN BAR BEFORE UNLEASHING ATTACK RAID DEMONSTRATES AL-QAEDA'S GROWING REACH

GRAND BASSAM: Gunmen from Al-Qaeda's North African branch drank beer at a beachside bar before launching a shooting rampage at an Ivory Coast resort town that left at least 18 people dead, the group's third major attack in West Africa in four months. Sunday's raid, details of which are beginning to emerge in witness and official accounts, was the furthest yet from Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb's (AQIM) traditional desert base, a worrying indication of the militants' growing reach.

The attack raised questions about Ivory Coast's preparedness for such an attack, with some asking why such a sensitive target was left so vulnerable. Fifteen civilians and three members of the special forces were killed and 33 people were wounded in the attack in Grand Bassam, a weekend retreat popular with lvorians and westerners about 40 km (25 miles) east of the commercial capital Abidjan.

Interior Minister Hamed Bakayoko said another 26 wounded were still receiving medical attention on Monday, as President Alassane Ouattara declared three days of mourning for the country, which has never before been hit by Al-Qaeda. Three militants also died in the attack on the resort town, a UNESCO heritage site of crumbling colonial-era buildings. Witness Christian Eddy said four men arrived in a Ford saloon car at the beachside bar where he works around noon on Sunday. While two remained outside, the two others entered and drank beers for around a half hour.

They then launched the attack. "They didn't speak French. They spoke Arabic. We communicated with shot him in the water," Eddy said. The gunmen then moved up the beach, continuing their killing spree and entering several seaside hotels.

Surveillance footage from Hotel Etoile du Sud one of the attackers' first targets where two people including a German woman and a Lebanese man were gunned down - showed the initial panic in the hotel bar as the first shots rang out. Staff crouched and then fled along with customers, among them parents carrying babies or leading young children by the hand. A man, apparently disguised as a waiter in a red waistcoat over a white dress shirt, entered with a rifle, fired at the empty bar and disappeared behind it, where the Lebanese man had been hiding. More gunshots were then heard.

The first police officers arrived on the scene around 15 minutes after the shooting began, witnesses said. It would be another half hour before special units from the security forces arrived from Abidjan. The victims included foreign citizens from Burkina Faso, Cameroon, France, Germany and Mali. Among the dead was Henrike Grohs, 51, head of the Abidjan branch of Germany's Goethe Institut cultural body. France's President Francois Hollande said four French nationals were killed in the attack. The French government had earlier said just one of its citizens had died.

Easy target

The attack is a heavy blow for lvory Coast, which has recovered from more than a decade of political turmoil and a 2011 civil war to become one of the world's fastest growing economies. President Ouattara from Algeria and now operates in much of western and northern Africa.

In January, gunmen killed dozens of people in a cafe frequented by foreigners in neighboring Burkina Faso's capital, Ouagadougou, and also attacked a hotel. Militants attacked another hotel in the Malian capital Bamako late last year, killing 20. Since those attacks, lvorian authorities have increased security around hotels and shopping malls in Abidjan, a city of around five million inhabitants. But there were few signs that was the case in Grand Bassam ahead of Sunday's attack. "Attacking Bassam was the easiest thing for them to do. Bassam is where all the expatriates and middle class from Abidjan gather on the weekends," said one longtime resident, who said he had seen no sign of recent security improvements.

"We don't understand why this wasn't considered a priority for protection. It would be easy," he said, asking not to be named. The recent attacks in the region are generally viewed as targeting France and its allies after Paris intervened militarily in Mali in 2013 to drive out Al-Qaeda-linked militants who had seized the desert north a year earlier. The attack in Grand Bassam, thousands of kilometers from Al-Qaeda's traditional operational zones, raises fears over where they might strike next. It poses serious security questions for former regional colonial power France, which has thousands of citizens and troops in the region.

While some 18,000 French citizens live in Ivory Coast, over 20,000 reside in Senegal. France has 3,500 troops in the region, from Senegal in the far west to Chad. A French military base in Abidjan, manned by

12 DIE IN FIRE AT RUSSIAN REHAB

MOSCOW: Twelve people died overnight as a fire swept through a rehab centre with barred windows in central Russia, investigators said yesterday. The bodies of 12 people, two of them women, were found in the residential building in the mainly Muslim Bashkortostan region, the regional Investigative Committee, which probes serious crimes, said in a statement. "They are believed all to be members of a social rehabilitation centre. Their identities are being established," investigators said.

Residents said the single-story building in the town of Sterlitamak, about 1,200 kilometers east of Moscow, housed a private drug rehabilitation centre, ProUfu.ru regional news website reported. An emergency situations official told Russian television that the windows "could not be opened from the inside or were bolted." The bodies had "no visible injuries", investigators said. "Based on the appearance of the bodies, they died from carbon monoxide poisoning," the head of the emergency service in Bashkortostan, Marat Latypov, told Interfax news agency. The head of the Bashkortostan region, Rustem Khamitov, said the victims were undergoing work therapy to get rid of "harmful habits".

He called for an investigation into why the "12 people were living in a small room with barred windows and a metal door." The fire was reported at 3:00 am Moscow time (GMT) and took almost two hours to extinguish, the regional emergency situations ministry said. Russia frequently sees deadly fires at state-run facilities for the elderly or those with mental illness, which often have bars on windows and locked doors and are located in isolated areas. In 2013, 37 people were killed when a fire swept through a psychiatric hospital in northwestern Russia. Russia is gripped by drug addiction fuelled by easy access to narcotics with the head of the federal anti-narcotics service estimating last week that 7.3 million people were addicted to drugs. — AFP them in English The guys who were still outside started shooting and the two seated at the table yelled 'Allahu Akbar' and flipped over the table," he said. But he didn't know what was happening and just went down to the water. They

"Ivory Coast will not let itself be intimidated by terrorists," Ouattara said in a televised address late on Monday. "Yes, Ivory Coast is on its feet. Yes, on its feet to combat the cowards and protect its people." AQIM has spread across the Sahara around 800 soldiers, serves as a logistical hub for regional operations against Islamist militancy in the Sahel. French Foreign Minister Jean-Marc Ayrault and Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve will travel to lvory Coast on Tuesday to offer logistical support and intelligence, French diplomatic sources said. Counter-terrorism officials have also been sent to help the investigation. — Reuters

FRENCH PM URGES CARDINAL TO 'TAKE RESPONSIBILITY' IN ABUSE SCANDAL

PARIS: French Prime Minister Manuel Valls yesterday urged a cardinal, accused of covering up the sexual abuse of young boys by a priest, to "take responsibility" in a case which has deeply embarrassed the French Church. Cardinal Philippe Barbarin hit back, insisting at a press conference: "I have never covered up paedophilia." The latest abuse scandal to hit the Catholic Church erupted when priest Bernard Prevnat was charged in January, after victims came forward with claims he had sexually abused Scouts between 1986 and 1991.

Prosecutors say he has admitted the charges. The victims have filed complaints against several senior officials in the Lyon diocese in eastern France, including Lyon archbishop Barbarin, accusing them of being aware of the abuse but failing to report the priest. Valls told BFM TV that without seeking to take the place of the Church or judges looking at the case, "The only message I have... is that (Barbarin) must take responsibility, speak and act." Barbarin has argued he was not archbishop at the time when the first complaints emerged against Preynat-who was briefly suspended and then moved to another parish.

Accusations were made against Preynat only when a victim who was allegedly abused in the 1980s realized in 2015 that the priest was still in service. Other victims have since come forward. The case recalls the recent Oscar-winning film "Spotlight", which highlighted how the Church transferred deviant priests between parishes in Boston in the United States. While this practice is no longer commonplace, the French case raises the question of how deep Church authorities should dig into abuse cases lurking in their past.

'Yes, I believed him'

Barbarin has said he learned of Preynat's "behaviors" in 2007 or 2008, and met with him "to ask if, since 1991, anything had happened; he assured me there had been absolutely nothing. "Some blame me for believing him... Yes, I believed him," Barbarin said in an interview with Catholic newspaper La Croix. The diocese removed Prevnat from service in May 2015. The Vatican has backed the cardinal, saying he had shown "a great deal of responsibility" in dealing with the matter.

But as the scandal took centre-stage at a meeting of France's 120 bishops in Lourdes, southwestern France, new accusations emerged against Barbarin. An alleged victim pressed new charges against the cardinal, saying he was sexually abused at the age of 16 by another Lyon priest who was still in service. The man, now 42, pressed charges against the priest in 2009, but the case could not go forward because of a statute of limitations.

He told Le Figaro newspaper that he met with Barbarin, who allegedly admitted that the priest involved had a problem-he had been sentenced to a month in prison in 2000 for exhibitionism-and apologized. But nothing was done to remove the priest from service. The scandal has been extremely embarrassing for the Church in France, which has worked to harden its stance against predator priests since Bishop Pierre Pican was convicted in 2001 for failing to report abuse. "The rules, best practices and prevention measures that we have put in place remain unequivocal," said Georges Pontier, archbishop of Marseille and head of the French Catholic Church.

'The culture has really changed'

The Church continues to be dogged by cases of priests abusing young children and past cover-ups, despite Pope Francis' promise of a crackdown. Barbarin's case, as well as a scandal in Australia that has seen Cardinal George Pell, the pope's powerful finance minister, accused of protecting paedophile priests, have been used as examples that a culture of silence persists.

But an editorial in Le Figaro argued that decades-old abuse cases do not necessarily reflect how the Church reacts today. "Most dioceses in the world now get rid of any accused priest, and demand that he report to the courts... The culture has really changed in the Church," the editorial read. Charles Scicluna, a former senior official in the Vatican's justice department, said: "Today it is no longer possible that a priest accused of paedophilia is simply moved to another parish." — AFP

ITALY SEXISM ROW OVER 'MAYOR NO JOB FOR A MAMMA' CLAIMS

ROME: Silvio Berlusconi sparked fury yesterday by claiming that being mayor of Rome was "no job for a mother" while backing a male candidate who advised a pregnant rival to stick to breastfeeding. The three-time former premier claimed the task of cleaning up the scandal-hit capital would be too much for far right candidate Giorgia Meloni, who is due to give birth soon after the election in May or June.

"A mother cannot dedicate herself to a terrible job and running Rome today is terrible job which will require 14 hours a day in the office," Berlusconi said. The media tycoon, famed for his bunga bunga parties with young female escorts, was speaking in support of Guido Bertolaso, who said on Monday that Meloni would be unable to "sort out the rubbish, the traffic jams and the rats in Rome when she will have to be at home nursing."

Meloni replied tersely. "I don't want a row, I simply say politely and proudly that I hope to be a very good mother, as are all the women who, with a thousand problems and often in much more difficult circumstances, manage to reconcile professional commitments with maternity." Behind the row lies a battle for ascendancy on the right of Italian politics with Berlusconi backing Bertolaso and Northern League leader Matteo Salvini endorsing Meloni in an election race the right feel they can win.

The last mayor, the centre-left's Ignazio Marino, was forced to resign last year after a minor expenses scandal intensified pressure on him over his perceived mismanagement of the cash-strapped capital. Salvini yesterday described Bertolaso's comments as "50 years out of date" while Italy Prime Minister Matteo Renzi insisted: "Of course a mother can be mayor." Female politicians lined up to denounce the outbursts as symptomatic of a lingering macho culture in Italian politics. "When will they ask a male candidate to withdraw because he is not telegenic? Or because he is due to be a father?," asked Constitutional Reform Minister Maria Elena Boschi on Twitter. — AFP

IN SECRET MEETINGS, TALEBAN REJECTS PAKISTAN PRESSURE ON PEACE PROCESS

ISLAMABAD: Pakistani officials threatened to expel Afghanistan's Taleban from bases in Pakistan if they did not join peace talks this month, but the militants rebuffed their traditional patron, two officials said, casting doubt on how much influence Islamabad retains over them. After the secret meetings with Pakistani officials about two weeks ago, the Taleban's Supreme Council met at an undisclosed location and voted to reject the talks scheduled for early March with the Afghan government, according to a council member.

Instead, the insurgents are now pouring back into Afghanistan for what they say will be a fierce spring offensive to be launched soon. Pakistan's influence over the insurgents is the lynchpin to the peace plan developed over last few months by Afghanistan, Pakistan, the United States and China to bring an end to the 15-yearold war in Afghanistan.

A Pakistani official in Islamabad said the Taleban's recent success on the battlefield inside Afghanistan had changed the equation. "They no longer need their Pakistan bases in the same way, so if Pakistan threatens to expel them, it does not have the same effect," said the official, a retired military officer close to the talks. The insurgents have won new zones of influence - if not outright control - from Afghan security forces since the United States and its allies pulled most combat troops from Afghanistan at the end of 2014, Afghan and Western officials acknowledge.

"Pakistan's trump card - safe havens on its soil - is in danger of being snatched away," said Michael Kugelman of the Woodrow Wilson Institute, a Washingtonbased think tank. "The Taleban have little incentive to step off the battlefield now, given recent gains and those likely to come in the next few months. In effect, why quit while you're ahead?" Nafees Zakaria, a spokesman for Pakistan's Foreign Office, said he had no knowledge of meetings with the Taleban but added, "We usually don't know who has met with whom" in the sensitive and high-level peace initiative.

In Kabul, however, members of the Afghan government were sceptical about Pakistan's assertions. "Pakistan's honesty and sincerity with regard to the Afghan peace process has always been a question," said an Afghan cabinet member, echoing the sentiment of several officials interviewed there. Pakistan's military has long been accused of fostering the Taleban as a way of pursuing regional rivalry with India. Pakistani officials, however, deny the charge and insist the government and military recognize that Afghanistan's war threatens their own security.

'Their dream'

A member of the Taleban's leadership council, or shura, whose members are mostly based in Pakistan and Afghanistan but also travel between Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, said rebel representatives met in Islamabad with Pakistani officials a little more than two weeks ago. 'They have asked our representatives to bring more decision-making people to the next meeting ... to the meeting with US and Afghan officials. This is their dream, but they will not be able to see our senior commanders," the Taleban council member said.—Reuters

LAW PROTECTING WOMEN FROM ABUSE 'UN-ISLAMIC'

PAKISTAN RELIGIOUS GROUPS URGE GOVT TO RETRACT LAW

LAHORE: An all-parties conference convened by Pakistan's oldest Islamic political party and attended by powerful religious groups asked the government yesterday to retract an "un-Islamic" law that gives unprecedented protection to female victims of violence. The Women's Protection Act, passed by Pakistan's largest province of Punjab last month, gives legal protection to women from domestic, psychological and sexual violence. It also calls for the creation of a toll-free abuse reporting hot line, women's shelters and district-level panels to investigate reports of abuse and mandates the use of GPS bracelets to keep track of offenders.

INTERNATIONAL

Domestic abuse, economic discrimination and acid attacks made Pakistan the world's third most dangerous country in the world for women, a 2011 Thomson Reuters Foundation expert poll showed. But since the law's passage, many conservative clerics and religious leaders have denounced it as being in conflict with the Muslim holy book, the Koran, and the constitution. Yesterday, representatives of more than 35 religious parties and groups came together for a conference called by the Jamaat-e-Islami party and condemned the women's protection law as un-Islamic.

"The controversial law to protect women was promulgated to accomplish the West's agenda to destroy the family system in Pakistan," read the joint declaration issued at the end of the concrescence. "This act ... is redundant and would add to the miseries of women." The passage of the new law was welcomed by rights groups but spirits have since dampened as conservative voices have increasingly called for its retraction. On Monday, Fazlur Rehman, the chief of one of Pakistan's largest religious parties, the Jamiat-i-Ulema Islam, said Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif had promised him at a meeting that he would address the reservations of religious parties.

"Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif heard our reservations against the Punjab Protection of Women Against Violence Act 2016. He promised to amend the law so that it doesn't contravene the teachings of the holy Koran," Maulana Fazl told journalists at his residence. Earlier this month, the Council of Islamic Ideology, a powerful Pakistani religious body that advises the government on the compatibility of laws with Islam, declared the Women's Protection Act un-Islamic. A prominent lawyer has also filed a petition in the top sharia court asking it to strike down the law.— Reuters approved sainthood for Mother Teresa, the missionary nun who became a global if controversial symbol of compassion for her care of the sick and destitute. The pontiff set September 4 as the date for her canonization, elevating the Nobel peace laureate to an official icon for the Catholic faith. The move comes 19 years after the death of the Albanian nun who dedicated much of her adult life to working with the poor in the slums of Kolkata, India.

Officials said the canonization ceremony would take place at the Vatican-an announcement which had been expected but nevertheless disappointed Indian Catholics who had hoped for a visit by Francis. Yesterday, hundreds attended a prayer meeting at Mother House in Kolkata, the global headquarters of the Missionaries of Charity where Mother Teresa is buried. Sushmita Roy, a housewife who was one of those attending, said Teresa had long been a saint in the eyes of Indian believers. "I came here today to pay homage to her," Roy said. "It would have been great if the canonisation of Mother Teresa would have been held in this city where she spent her life."

'Saint of the Gutters'

Teresa, who was 87 when she died in 1997, was revered by Catholics and and many others around the world. Known as the "Angel of Mercy" or "Saint of the Gutters", she won the 1979 Nobel peace prize for her work with the poor. But she was also a controversial and divisive figure with critics branding her a religious imperialist whose fervent opposition to birth control and abortion ran contrary to the interests of the communities she claimed to serve. Despite posthumously published letters revealing that she suffered crises of faith throughout her life, Teresa has been fast-tracked to canonization in unusuallv quick time, underlining her status as a modern-day icon of Catholicism.

Teresa took the first step to sainthood in 2003 when she was beatified by Pope John Paul II following the recognition of a claim she had posthumously inspired the 1998

VATICAN CITY: Pope Francis yesterday healing of a critically-ill Bengali tribal woman. Last year she was credited by Vatican experts with inspiring the 2008 recovery of a Brazilian man suffering from multiple brain tumours, thus meeting the Church's standard requirement for sainthood of having been involved in two certifiable miracles.

Gentle eye that 'sees'

Teresa was born Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu to Albanian parents in 1910 in Skopje, now the capital of Macedonia. She started her life as a nun as a teenager with a missionary order in Ireland and arrived in India in 1929. She founded her own Missionaries of Charity order in 1950 and was granted Indian citizenship a year later. Francis, who regards Teresa as the incarnation of the kind of Church he wants to lead, met the by-then internationally famous nun three years before her death, when he was still a bishop in Argentina.

He later joked that she had seemed so formidable he "would have been scared if she had been my mother superior". Others were much harsher in their judgment, with the likes of Australian-born feminist writer Germaine Greer and British polemicist Christopher Hitchens accusing her of contributing to the misery of the poor with what they saw as her dogmatic views. In her Nobel acceptance speech Teresa described terminations of pregnancies as "direct murder by the mother herself".

Critics also raised questions about the Missionaries of Charity's finances and the often insalubrious conditions in the order's hospices. The late Italian film director and writer Pier Paolo Pasolini was among those who fell under her spell, in his case when he met her during a trip to India in the early 1960s. "She has an almost virile jaw and a gentle eye that in its gaze 'sees', he wrote, describing Teresa as a a combination of "goodness without sentimentality, someone with no expectations who is both calm and calming, powerfully practical." India granted her a state funeral after her death and her grave has since become a pilgrimage site.—AFP

FROM SUU KYI'S SCHOOL FRIEND TO PROXY PRESIDENT

NAYPYIDAW: Myanmar's next president may be little known outside his homeland but for Aung San Suu Kyi, who plucked her schoolfriend and longtime aide from the political sidelines to be her proxy, it is Htin Kyaw's loyalty that is paramount. The 69-year-old was comfortably elected Myanmar's first civilian president since 1962 yesterday, a position he will hold in place of the Nobel laureate who is banned from top office by the army-drafted constitution.

The son of a revered poet who has helped run Suu Kyi's charitable foundation in recent years, Htin Kyaw is billed as someone with a high level of education, personal standing and absolute trustworthiness to "The Lady". Yet he remains an unknown and untested quantity with many asking how much influence he will wield over a government he will only nominally lead and in a complex political system where the military still wields considerable influence.

Suu Kyi has pledged to pull the strings of power from "above" her appointee, though in this delicate and secretive transition, she has not revealed how the arrangement will work. But Htin Kyaw's appointment suggests she thinks he has sufficient pedigree in the country's long struggle against junta rule to be embraced by the millions of voters who swept to the polls in November to validate her star power and simple message of change. He is believed to have joined the party last year-although the NLD has not confirmed exactly when.

Nonetheless the soft-spoken economics graduate's life has been entwined with Myanmar's democracy struggle and Suu Kyi's movement. His father Min Thu Wun, was a national poet and early NLD member while his wife Su Su Lwin is a sitting party MP whose late father was once party spokesman.

NAYPYIDAW: Myanmar's next president may be little known outside his homeland but for Aung San Suu Kyi, who plucked her schoolfriend "He's not just anybody, he comes from a very political family," Bertil Lintner, a veteran Myanmar commentator said.

Right hand man

His inner circle closeness to Suu Kyi was illustrated in 2010 when the Nobel Laureate was finally released from years of house arrest. As she greeted jubilant crowds from behind the gate of her crumbling Yangon mansion, Htin Kyaw stood to her right. During those heady but often unsure times when Suu Kyi remained under intense military scrutiny, he could sometimes be seen at the wheel of her car, shuttling her between high-level meetings.

For the last four years he has been a senior executive in Suu Kyi's charity, which provides development aid and skills training to her Kawhmu constituency and other areas of the impoverished country. In an interview with AFP about the charity's work in July 2015, Htin Kyaw spoke of the steep climb Myanmar faced to claw its way out of poverty. "You see that we are doing a lot, which means we need a lot. We are just doing only a very small portion of what is required for the nation," he said.

Born in 1946, Htin Kyaw earned a masters degree in 1968 from the Yangon Economics University and went on to complete further courses abroad, including in the UK, the US and Japan. According to an official biography released by the Daw Khin Kyi Foundation, he studied at the University of London's Institute of Computer Science from 1971 to 72. In a varied career he worked as a university teacher and also held positions in the finance and national planning and foreign affairs ministries in the late 1970s and 80s before retiring from government service as the military tightened its grip.—AFP

HISTORIC VOTE GIVES MYANMAR FIRST CIVILIAN PRESIDENT IN DECADES

NAYPYIDAW: Myanmar got its first civilian president in decades yesterday after lawmakers elected a close aide of Aung San Suu Kyi, who is expected to hold the real reins of power in the formerly junta-run nation.

Htin Kyaw, 69, hailed his elevation to the top post as "Suu Kyi's victory", a clear nod to her plan that he serve as a proxy for the Nobel laureate who is constitutionally barred from becoming president. MPs erupted into applause after the result was announced following a lengthy ballot count by hand in the capital Naypyidaw, in which Htin Kyaw took 360 of 652 votes cast.

Myanmar is undergoing a dramatic transformation from an isolated and repressed pariah state to a rapidly opening aspiring democracy. Suu Kyi's National League for Democracy won a thumping victory at elections in November, allowing her party to dominate Myanmar's two legislative houses. But the military remains a powerful force and has refused to change a clause in the junta-era constitution which bars her from the presidency.

The veteran activist has instead vowed to rule "above" the next leader. Her choice of Htin Kyaw is seen as a testament to her absolute faith in his loyalty. "This is sister Aung San Suu Kyi's victory," the newly elected president told reporters after the vote. Htin Kyaw will be sworn in on March 30, replacing incumbent Thein Sein. It will be the first time Myanmar has had a civilian president since 1962, when the military seized power.

Thein Sein, a former general, led a quasi-civilian reformist government for the last five years that has been praised for moving the nation out of the shadow of outright military rule.

For many MPs from Suu Kyi's party Yesterday's vote was a vindication of their long years of struggle for democracy under the repressive former junta, which locked up hundreds of dissidents as it tried to stifle criticism.

The NLD is still haunted by its 1990 election victory, which was snatched away by the generals. Zin Mar Aung, an NLD MP who was involved in 1988 protests and is herself a former political prisoner, termed the vote "very historic". She said the election of Htin Kyaw, who was also detained by the former junta, made her think of their long struggle and "the way we have marched to here since more than 20 years ago".

But others expressed disappointment their leader would not be taking the top post.

"We all want to see Aung San Suu Kyi be the president," NLD MP Myo Zaw Aung told AFP. "But so far, it is not reality." Yesterday's election also confirmed the two other candidates as vice presidents-retired general Myint Swe, who is seen as a hardliner ally of the former strongman Than Shwe and is on Washington's sanctions list, and ethnic Chin MP Henry Van Thio.

Chosen one

Suu Kyi, 70, enjoys unrivalled popularity both as the daughter of the country's independence hero and as a central figure in the decades-long democracy struggle. It is not yet clear what role she plans to take or how she will manage her relationship with the new president. She is barred from top political office because she married and had children with a foreigner. Months of negotiations with army chief Min Aung Hlaing failed to remove the charter clause that blocks her. In central Yangon people crowded into teashops to watch the vote live on television."He was chosen by Mother Suu. Now he is our president. He will be a good president because he has been working with Mother Suu for many years," said Daw Mya, 60, a vegetable vendor.

While little known outside Myanmar, Htin Kyaw commands considerable respect inside the country, partly because his father was a legendary writer and early member of the NLD.

Though he has never previously stood for political office, he is married to sitting NLD MP Su Su Lwin, whose late father was the party's respected spokesman, and he helps run Suu Kyi's charitable foundation.

A new cabinet, set to be announced at the end of the month, is expected to include figures from across the political spectrum as Suu Kyi tries to promote national reconciliation. It will face many challenges, including poverty, civil wars in ethnic minority borderlands and decrepit infrastructure.

Senior party figures say one of the government's first tasks will be to whittle down myriad ministries by combining overlapping portfolios.

But one of the most crucial tasks will be to manage the relationship with the military, which retains significant power including control of the vital home, defense and border ministries.—AFP

MALAYSIA DEPORTS AUSTRALIAN REPORTERS; PAIR WON'T BE CHARGED

CANBERKA, Australia: Malaysian authorities will not charge two journalists from Australia's state-owned broadcaster who attempted to interview Malaysia's prime minister over corruption allegations, deciding to deport them instead, police said yesterday.

The decision came after Australia's government intervened and suggested the detention was part of a Malaysian crackdown on press freedom. Following the deportation orders, Australian Broadcasting Corp. television reporter Linton Besser and camera operator Louie Eroglu left Malaysia on a flight yesterday, ABC confirmed in an email to staff. The pair had previously been told to appear in a Sarawak state court on yesterday morning charged with obstructing a public servant from discharging his duties when they guestioned Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak as he entered a mosque in the state capital of Kuching on Saturday.

ABC reported that two hours after a press release was issued Monday confirming the charge, the lawyer for the two was told they would not be charged. The broadcaster said no explanation was given for the change.

Sarawak police said in a statement that they were told by prosecutors yesterday that no charges would be filed. The pair was to be deported, the statement said, without giving further details.

Shortly before boarding his flight at Malaysia's Kuching International Airport, Besser said he was relieved the ordeal was behind him. "There have been a lot or changing events. It has been a roller coaster, but it's almost over," he said.

ABC's news director, Gaven Morris, said the journalists would continue to investigate the corruption story. "They did nothing wrong in Kuching. They were doing journalism," he said in a statement. "This incident has demonstrated again why it is vital to defend media freedom, including the right to question authority."

On Monday, Australian Foreign Minister Julie Bishop said the case would be raised at the "highest levels within the Malaysian government." She said there were concerns about "a crackdown on freedom of speech." Sarawak police said the pair were detained after they "crossed the security line and aggressively tried to approach" Prime Minister Najib, accusations that ABC denied.

Najib is engulfed in a scandal over $681 million deposited into his bank accounts in early 2013. Critics accuse him of corruption and say the money came from an indebted state investment fund that he founded in 2009. In January, Malaysian Attorney General Mohamed Apandi Ali decided not to prosecute the prime minister, saying the money was a "personal donation" from the Saudi royal family. Besser and Eroglu, on assignment for an investigative current affairs program, had asked Najib as he entered a mosque why the money had been deposited into his accounts, ABC reported. Najib did not respond and his security detail surrounded the two.-AP

VIETNAMESE HONOR SOLDIERS KILLED BY CHINESE 28 YEARS AGO

HANOI, Vietnam: About 200 Vietnamese gathered in central Hanoi on Monday to remember 64 Vietnamese soldiers who were killed by the Chinese navy in a clash 28 years ago in the disputed South China Sea.

They lit incense and laid flowers at the statue of King Ly Thai To, a Vietnamese hero, and then marched around the landmark Hoan Kiem Lake, chanting "down with Communist China's aggression" in the commemoration that lasted an hour.

There were no official commemorations by the government."I think the government should organize official ceremonies to remember those soldiers who were killed defending Truong Sa and Hoang Sa islands," said 84-year-old retired civil servant Le Mai Dau, one of the participants. Truong Sa and Hoang Sa are Vietnamese terms for the Spratly and Paracel islands.

Police watched the ceremony but did not intervene. Unauthorized gatherings are normally stopped by the authorities.

The 64 were killed in skirmishes with the Chinese at Johnson South Reef in the Spratly Islands and nine Vietnamese engineering soldiers were taken prisoner. In the last two years China has reclaimed land around the Johnson South Reef to form artificial islands.

China claims almost all of the Spratlys, which are rich in natural resources. Vietnam along with the Philippines, Malaysia, Brunei and Taiwan also claim parts or all of the islands.—AP

MAJOR THAI TRAFFICKING TRIAL OPENS AMID FEARS FOR WITNESSES

BANGKOK: The trial of 92 suspected human traffickers, arrested after the discovery of shallow graves of migrants in Thai jungle, began in Bangkok yesterday and the attorney-general's office said it would be over within a year amid fears about the safety of witnesses.

Traffickers abandoned boatloads of migrants at sea last year after a crackdown by Thai authorities that led to a regional migrant crisis with Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, Myanmar and Bangladesh refusing boats permission to land.

Rights groups had expressed fears that a drawnout case, lasting anything up to two years, could put the hundreds of witnesses at risk because of inadequate police protection. "The court is accelerating the case to finish within a year," said Prayuth Porsuttayaruk, deputy director-general of the human trafficking office at the Attorney-General's Office.

Thailand remains on the lowest tier on the US State Department's Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report for not meeting the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking.

Sunai Phasuk, senior researcher on Thailand at Human Rights Watch, welcomed a shorter trial but said the cases should not be rushed to impress the United States. "It will totally send the wrong message if the trial is being fast-tracked simply to impress the TIP report reviewers." The defendants, wearing beige prison uniforms, were brought to the packed court for the start of formal hearings.

The investigation and arrests followed the discovery of 30 shallow graves at a trafficking camp near the Malaysian border. Many of the bodies were believed to be of Rohingya, a persecuted ethnic Muslim minority in majority Buddhist Myanmar.

Weeks later, police revealed 139 graves had been found over the border in Malaysia. That led to a crackdown on the multi-million dollar trade which had until then flourished in Thailand's southern provinces and in Malaysia.

The 92 suspected human traffickers include an army general, civilians and police. Rights groups have called on authorities to step up witness protection after some witnesses said they had been forced into hiding because of threats.

Prayuth said the justice ministry was "looking after the witnesses", but did not say how many of the more than 400 witnesses were receiving police protection. Around 50 suspects were still at large, said Prayuth. Some had fled to neighbouring Myanmar. The United Nations and rights group say the number of migrants leaving Myanmar and Bangladesh by boat in past months has plummeted because of the Thai and Bangladeshi crackdowns on human smugglers. The number of people trying to flee was expected to be significantly lower this year, they said.—Reuters

B'DESH BANK CHIEF QUITS OVER $81M CYBER HEIST

He described the heist as an "earthquake" and said the bank had promptly informed intelligence agencies in Bangladesh and abroad and also brought in international experts to investigate. FireEye Inc's Mandiant forensics division is helping investigate the cyber heist. The bank has also been in touch with the Fed and other US authorities, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and Department of Justice.

Bangladesh Bank is also working with anti-money laundering authorities in the Philippines, where it suspects the stolen $81 million arrived in four tranches. The Philippines' Rizal Commercial Banking Corp (RCBC) said last week it was investigating deposits amounting to just that sum, which were made at one of its branches. Teofisto Guingona, head of the Philippines Senate's anti-corruption committee, told Reuters the transfers into RCBC were subsequently consolidated into one account and some of the money was converted to pesos.

CCTV cameras at the branch were not functioning when the money was withdrawn, RCBC's anti-money laundering head, Laurinda Rogero, told the Senate hearing. The president of a foreign exchange broker called Philrem Service Corp, Salud Bautista, told the Senate that her firm was instructed by the bank branch to transfer the funds to a man named Weikang Xu and two casinos. She said that $30 million went to Xu in cash. Guingona has said Xu was ethnic Chinese and a foreigner, but he was not sure if he was a Chinese national. A tranche of $29 million ended up in an account of Solaire, a casino resort owned and operated by Bloomberry Resorts Corp. Bloomberry is controlled by Enrique Razon, the Philippines' fifth-richest man in 2015, according to Forbes. Silverio Benny Tan, corporate secretary of Bloomberry Resorts, told the hearing that the $29 million was transferred into a casino account under Xu's name in exchange for 'dead chips' that can only be cashed in from winnings.

Bautista said a further $21 million went to an account of Eastern Hawaii Leisure Co, a gaming firm in northern Philippines. Reuters tried several phone numbers to seek comment from Eastern Hawaii officials but was unable to reach any. "Our money trail ended up at the casinos," Julia Bacay Abad, executive director of the Anti-Money Laundering Council, told the open hearing. She said her agency had frozen 44 accounts connected to the case and had requested assistance from the FBI. Senator Guingona said that because casinos are not covered by the country's anti-money laundering laws it was not clear if the stolen funds could ever be recovered. "The paper trail ends there. That is the problem," he said. "Right now we are at a dead end."— Agencies

SUBAIH GRILLING DELAYED, DASHTI IMMUNITY...

Dashti was stripped of his immunity in the state security case 10/2016 related to addressing abusive remarks against Saudi Arabia. Up to 41 MPs approved the request and five declined, out of the 46 MPs present in the session. The parliamentary legislative panel unanimously recommended in its meeting on March 13 the prosecution's request, denying that the case had any personal ill intentions.

The committee had clarified that the public prosecutor received a letter from the foreign ministry notifying him about an official memo addressed by the Saudi Embassy in Kuwait stating that the Dashti had uttered harmful remarks against the kingdom during an interview with Syrian television channel Al-Ekhabria on Feb 24. He was also accused of inciting against the kingdom. The MP had made similar remarks in previous TV interviews.

Elderly people's rights

Meanwhile, lawmakers endorsed a draft law to preserve the rights of the elderly for optimum care. The draft law identifies any Kuwaiti citizen above the age of 65 to be an elderly person, however it differentiates between an elderly person capable of independent living and one who does not have the wherewithal to do so, or is physically or mentally incapacitated.

The draft law provides numerous advantages enabling the elderly to secure their needs with ease and dignity, including the requirement that senior citizen cards be issued to them with which they could obtain government or public services without any hassle.

The elderly, in accordance with this law, would get some government services without charge, such as free bus passes, or special care at government clinics and hospitals. This draft law urges the private sector and civil society organizations to dabble into establishing and running elderly care facilities and to create means of supporting families that have elderly folks amongst them. Following voting on the draft law, Subaih touted the law but pointed out that it was an improvement on an existing law from the 1970s. She promised that she would implement the law when it is officially sanctioned by the government.

and public schools.Minister of State for Cabinet Affairs Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah Al-Mubarak Al-Sabah had warned that the government would abstain from voting unless such recommendations were reformulated. But, he had assured that the issue of illegal residents was given top priority by the government.

Government contracts

Also yesterday, the Assembly approved a recommendation for excluding government contracts for companies with a record of flaws and in and shortcomings in past deals' execution. The parliament approved the recommendation against such companies, with a record of breaches and irregularities recorded by the Audit Bureau, to avert recurrence of such shortcomings, Moreover, the parliamentary commission for protecting public funds will present to the parliament, at the upcoming session, a report about a company with an identical record.

Also in the same session, Minister of Commerce and Industry Yousef Al-Ali pledged to hold a presentation on terms' compatibility, due to be addressed to the central tenders committee regarding an infrastructural project, pending the funds protection panel's crossexamination of the company.

Sovereign rating

Furthermore, the parliament approved an address from the Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister Anas Al-Saleh to the financial affairs committee regarding prospected downgrading of Kuwait's sovereign rating internationally. The MPs blessed a request by MP Faisal Al-Kandari urging the Assembly to tackle conditions in the oil sector and another one addressed to the finance minister re-examine irregular acts and performance reported by the Audit Bureau.

In response to the motion, presented by Kandari, the minister said that the examination and hazards committee at Kuwait Petroleum Corporation had tasked him with following up on remarks of the Audit Bureau. As to "purported targeting of special allocations" for the oil personnel, the minister affirmed the government serious care for the sector and the workers, explaining that the government is actually seeking to "rationalize some of the allotments granted to leaders" in the public and oil sectors.

JOLIE VISITS LEBANON, SAYS WORLD HAS FAILED REFUGEES

BEIRUT: Angelina Jolie, the Hollywood actress and special envoy for the UN's refugee agency, said yesterday that the international community must address the root causes of the global refugee crisis. "We cannot manage the world through aid relief in the place of diplomacy and political solutions," she said under the pouring rain at a press conference in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley. Hundreds of thousands of Syrians have sought refuge in the Bekaa. Lebanon hosts well over a million Syrian refugees, who now account for nearly a fifth of its population.

Jolie said she had hoped to be in Syria helping victims return to their homes on the fifth anniversary of the uprising against President Bashar Al-Assad. She said it's "tragic and shameful that we seem to be so far from that point." There are now more people displaced through conflict around the globe than during World War II, according to the UN. The war in Syria between Assad's government, rebels and foreign jihadis has drawn in world powers and generated what the UN says is the largest humanitarian catastrophe in a generation.

Half of Syria's prewar population of some 23 million has been displaced, with around 5 million having fled their homeland, mainly to neighboring Lebanon, Jordan, Turkey and Iraq. The international relief organization OXFAM warned yesterday that Lebanese municipalities are running out of space to bury deceased refugees. "We should never forget that for all the focus on the refugee situation in Europe at this time, the greatest pressure is still being felt in the Middle East and North Africa, as it has for each of the last five years," Jolie said.

After a tidal wave of refugees poured into Europe last year, some countries began erecting political and physical barriers to migration, which have left tens of thousands of refugees stuck in squalid conditions in the Balkans this spring. Jolie called on such countries to adhere to their international obligations to aid refugees. "The reason we have laws and binding international agreements is precisely because of the temptation to deviate from them in times of pressure," she said. — AP

"That was an amazing discovery," Mearns said. "It was like a thing you read about in a Hollywood story." The archaeologists announced their findings in an article published yesterday by The International Journal of Nautical Archaeology. Ayoub Al-Busaidi, the supervisor of marine archaeology at the Oman Ministry of Heritage and Culture, said this marked the first underwater excavation carried out by his country. He said it inspired officials to continue to explore the waters around the sultanate for other finds. "Oman is now looking at outside archives to read about the relationships and trade between Oman and the outside" world, Busaidi said. — AP

RUSSIA JETS RETURN FROM SYRIA

Syrian Observatory for Human Rights director Rami Abdel Rahman told AFP that "Russian helicopters and warplanes, that are likely Russian" had struck IS targets around the ancient city of Palmyra. There was no official confirmation from Moscow.

Meanwhile, one Al-Qaeda linked group branded the withdrawal a "defeat" and vowed to launch a new offensive in Syria. Putin said Monday that Moscow's military goal had been "on the whole" completed some five-and-a-half months and 9,000 combat sorties after the Kremlin launched its bombing campaign in support of Assad. State media broadcast live footage of flag-waving crowds and priests greeting returning pilots at a military base in southwest Russia as a brass band played.

The West reacted cautiously to the announcement, since Moscow is yet to specify a timeframe for completing the withdrawal, and a Kremlin official said Russia will keep advanced air defence systems in Syria. Some governments expressed hope the Russian move could push Assad to negotiate, but in Geneva both sides remained locked in a bitter dispute over his fate. The talks opened after a temporary ceasefire between Assad's forces and opponents went into force on Feb 27 and has largely held, although it does not cover IS jihadists and Al-Qaeda's Syrian affiliate the Al-Nusra Front.

De Mistura was yesterday to hold his first official meeting with the opposition High Negotiations Committee (HNC), which has repeatedly said Assad cannot be part of Syria's political future. Damascus sparked Western anger by staking out an uncompromising stance before the talks, insisting that discussions on Assad's removal were a "red line" they would not cross. Putin's spokesman Dmitry Peskov denied that the Kremlin was angered by Assad's perceived inflexibility. But in February, Russia was unusually critical of Assad after he vowed in an interview with AFP to retake the whole country, saying his stance was "not in accord" with Moscow's diplomatic efforts. German Foreign Minister Frank-Walter Steinmeier said a Russian withdrawal "increases the pressure" on Assad to negotiate, while France's foreign ministry said "anything that helps towards a de-escalation in Syria should be encouraged".

Moscow has pledged to ratchet up its own diplomatic efforts to find a political solution to a conflict that has killed more than 270,000 people and displaced millions since March 2011. The White House said President Barack Obama had spoken to Putin following Russia's announcement, and discussed the "next steps required to fully implement the cessation of hostilities". But US officials offered a cautious initial assessment. "At this point, we are going to see how things play out over the next few days," a senior administration official told AFP.

The foreign minister of Iran - which controls thousands of troops supporting Assad on the ground in Syria - said Russia's withdrawal showed Moscow did not "see an imminent need (to) resort to force in maintaining the ceasefire". Russia began air strikes in Syria in September, in a move that helped shore up the regime's crumbling forces and allowed them to go on the offensive. Moscow sent some 50 warplanes to carry out thousands of strikes across Syria, saying it was targeting "terrorist" groups including IS jihadists. The intervention was slammed by the West and its regional allies, which accused Moscow of mainly bombing more moderate rebels.

Meanwhile, a jihadist commander told AFP that Al-Nusra was preparing to launch a new offensive "within the next 48 hours", saying the regime was unable to hold onto territory it had seized with the help of the Russians. Syria's main opposition welcomed the Kremlin announcement, but said it would wait to see what happens on the ground. "We must verify the nature of this decision and its meaning," HNC spokesman Salem Al-Meslet told reporters in Geneva. After his first official meeting with the regime on Monday, de Mistura told reporters that "strong statements (and) rhetoric" were part of every tough negotiation and that his initial discussions with government representative Bashar Al-Jaafari were "useful". — AFP

Illegal residents

In the meantime, the Assembly gave the thumbs up to several recommendations pertinent to the conditions of illegal residents (bedoons). The recommendations included the naturalization of worthy illegal residents, mainly the children of martyrs, Kuwaitis' relatives and military personnel.

They also called for handing out 'security cards' to illegal residents who are not included in naturalization lists so that they could gain access to basic humanitarian and social rights, recruiting them at military and government agencies and bodies as well as the private sector, and for reconsidering existing security restrictions on illegal residents' families. Furthermore, illegal residents should be given access to birth and death certificates, marriage and divorce contracts, driving licenses

Universities' bill

Separately, Minister of Education and Higher Education Bader Al-Essa affirmed significance of the public universities' bill, allowing establishment of branches for Kuwait University and the Public Authority for Applied Education and Training in the country's six governorates.

During the session, the minister said the said bill had been referred to the parliamentary committee for educational affairs, pending voting in the parliament. On press reports about non-accredited certificates, he said 200 persons who work in the private sector and suspected of involvement in the case have been referred to the public prosecution.— KUNA

N KOREA NUKE Threat not all bluff, bluster

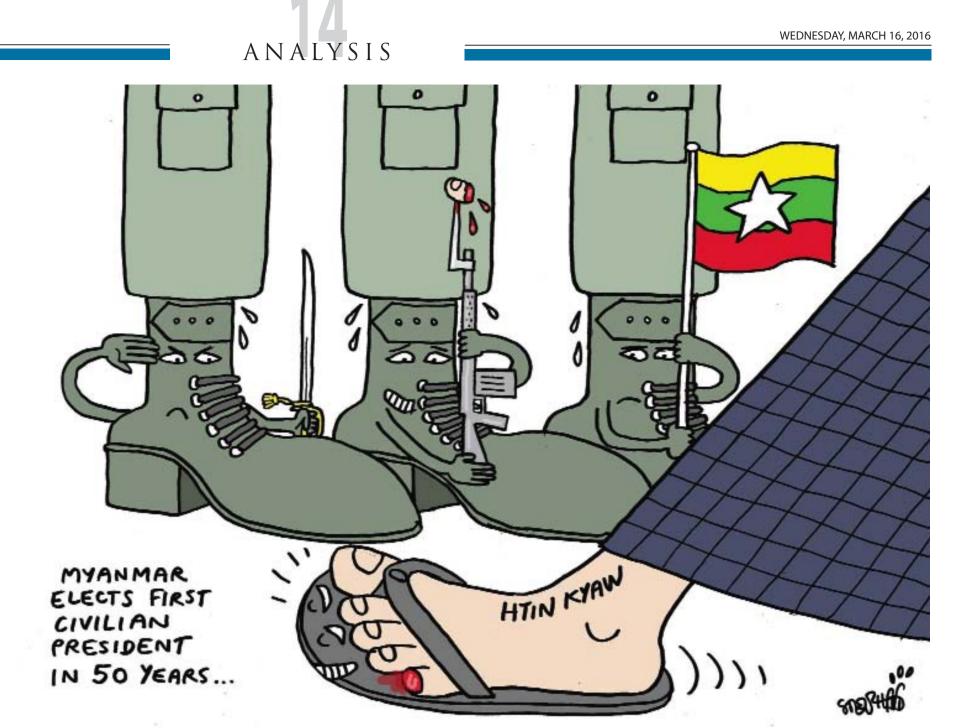

By Eric Talmadge

Skeptics of North Korea's nuclear threat, and there are many, have long clung to two comforting thoughts. While the North has the bomb, it doesn't have a warhead small enough to put on a long-range rocket. And it certainly doesn't have a re-entry vehicle to keep that warhead from burning up in the atmosphere before it could reach a target like, as it has suggested before, Manhattan. North Korea yesterday suggested it will soon show the world it has mastered both technologies.

That would require a huge jump in the North's suspected nuclear capabilities, so it may be just the latest case of Pyongyang saying with vitriolic propaganda something it cannot demonstrate in tests. But if it delivers, it will put to rest one other comforting thought: that it's safe for policymakers in Washington and elsewhere to take North Korea's claims as mainly just bluster.

"We have proudly acquired the re-entry technology, possessed by a few countries styling themselves as military powers, by dint of self-reliance and self-development," North Korean leader Kim Jong Un was quoted as saying. The authoritarian country's state-run media reported he made the comment after meeting scientists and technicians, following what it said was a successful ground test of a re-entry vehicle.

The report said Kim ordered the commencement of preparations for a "nuclear warhead explosion test" and test-firings of "several kinds of ballistic rockets able to carry nuclear warheads" to be conducted soon. As with all such reports, it's hard to separate Pyongyang's wishful thinking from the current reality. North Korea's most likely candidate for an intercontinental ballistic missile is generally known as the KN-08 - in North Korea it's called the Hwasong. The three-stage rocket has an estimated range of 5,000-6,000 km, longer if modified further. That range would be ample for attacks on US military bases in Japan, but not the US mainland. A militarized version of the rocket used to put a North Korean satellite into orbit last month is believed to have - potentially - a much longer range that could reach the US. A new version of the KN-08 was displayed at a military parade in October. IHS Jane's Defense weekly said it featured a smaller and blunter warhead shape "that could confirm US intelligence assessments and North Korean claims of success in miniaturizing its nuclear warheads."

TRUMP WITHOUT HAIR? EU POLICY GETS ROUGH

By Paul Taylor

urope's emerging migration policy is looking increasingly like Donald Trump without the hair. Except that, unlike the Republican presidential frontrunner, who wants to make Mexico pay for a wall to keep migrants out of the United States, the Europeans are willing to pay their neighbor Turkey to do the job for them. Seven months and a million migrants after Chancellor Angela Merkel declared a "welcome culture" for Syrian refugees in Germany, the European Union is rushing to erect "No vacancy" signs along its internal and external borders.

Under fierce political pressure in her own conservative camp and from an insurgent right-wing populist party, the Alternative for Germany (AfD), Merkel's mantra of "We can do this" is morphing into "The Turks can do this for us". In a surprise overnight deal she negotiated with Turkish Prime Minister net Davutoglu last week, Ankara offered to take back all migrants, including Syrian refugees, who cross from its shores into Europe from now on or are intercepted off its coast. Having thus sealed its most porous border to irregular migrants, the EU would admit a limited number of carefully vetted Syrian refugees directly from Turkey - one for each Syrian asylum seeker Ankara took back from Greek Aegean islands. The lucky few would be chosen with the help of the UN refugee agency from among those who had waited patiently in camps in Syria's neighbors, not those who had paid smugglers thousands of euros for a risky sea crossing. They would be sent to those EU countries that agreed last year to take in a quota, although some states are resisting that.

Stifling doubts about the legality of such a blanket return policy, discomfort at outsourcing it to a partner many of them see as worryingly authoritarian, and irritation at the price Turkey is demanding, stunned EU leaders gave their provisional assent.

Desperation

European public opinion is so petrified by images of tens of thousands of bedraggled migrants trekking across muddy fields and highways towards western and northern Europe - and populists have made such capital out of those fears - that governments are desperate to halt the flow. Another summit in Brussels this week is due to conclude the Faustian bargain, granting Turkey Ä6 billion ($6.7 billion) in aid to keep refugees on its soil an accelerated path to visa Turks and faster EU membership talks in return for its agreement to act as Europe's gatekeeper. European Council President Donald Tusk says regaining control of Europe's external borders is a condition for gaining public acceptance to take in refugees. In practice, it looks more like a way of keeping them out, if it can be implemented. Human rights groups and volunteers who work with refugees are outraged to see Europe slamming shut its open door for victims of war and persecution.

refugees requires signatories to examine individually each claim for protection submitted by an asylum seeker on their soil. The German-Turkish deal would get around that provision by declaring Turkey a "safe" third country to which irregular migrants could be returned under a bilateral Greek-Turkish readmission agreement. The United Nations' top human rights official has said that could entail illegal "collective and arbitrary expulsions".

Apart from the moral issues raised by this dodge, there are several legal problems. Turkey restricts its application of the Geneva Convention to refugees from Europe. People fleeing war or persecution in the Middle East and Asia will not be covered unless Ankara amends its laws. Turkish officials say they will ensure Turkey complies with international law to fulfil its part of the potential EU deal. Even so, lawyers say asylum seekers who reach Greece have a right to appeal against being sent back to Turkey if they fear for their personal safety there. A Greek court would have to hear each appeal before a person could be removed. There is no appropriate court on the Greek islands, and Greek justice is notoriously slow.

tion and jail, and businessmen and public officials close to a dissident Muslim cleric have been purged. Unlike Trump, most EU leaders do not declare they want to prevent more Muslims settling in their country, with the exception of Hungary's Viktor Orban and Slovakia's Robert Fico, who have stressed preserving their countries' Christian identity.

However, anti-immigration campaigners like Marine Le Pen in France and Geert Wilders in the Netherlands openly cite Islam as a reason for rejecting refugees, and they are increasingly setting the agenda for mainstream politicians. They oppose visa-free travel for Turks in Europe for the same reason. France, which has a tradition of political asylum and took in tens of thousands of Vietnamese "boatpeople" in the 1970s, is limiting its intake of Syrian refugees now, citing security concerns following last year's Islamist attacks in Paris.

Like other west European countries, rance has struggled to integrate second

Incredulity

But the Pentagon has often expressed incredulity over the reliability of the KN-08 because North Korea has never tested it "end-to-end" - meaning from launch through re-entry and warhead delivery - to prove it works. Just last week, photos of Kim, splashed across the front page of the ruling party's Rodong Sinmun newspaper, showed him standing in a hangar filled with ballistic missiles and looking happily down at a silvery orb about the size of a disco ball.

Experts say the object looks very much like a credible nuclear weapon, though it was clearly a mock-up of whatever device the North may have. Kim and his scientists certainly wouldn't have stood so close to the real thing without radioactivity protection gear. Nor would Kim, a chain smoker, likely have been holding a lit cigarette right next to it. The message, however, was obvious: We know what you think our weaknesses are, and you might consider thinking twice.

"Every time the North Koreans test another bomb or a missile, I get calls asking what message the North Koreans are trying to send," wrote Jeffrey Lewis, director of the East Asia Nonproliferation Program at the James Martin Center for Nonproliferation Studies, in a recent op-ed in the influential Foreign Policy magazine. "Well, let's see: They've paraded two different ICBMs through Pyongyang, conducted four nuclear tests, showed us a compact nuclear design sitting next to a modern re-entry vehicle in front of one of those ICBMs, and hung a giant wall map of the United States marked with targets and titled 'Mainland Strike Plan," he wrote. "Here's a wild guess: They are building nuclear-armed ICBMs to strike the United States! Why is this so hard to grasp?"

Timing

The timing of Pyongyang's recent moves is crucial. It's facing a new UN sanctions package after its Jan 6 nuclear test which it claimed was of an H-bomb - and has significantly amped up its rhetoric amid unprecedentedly large-scale war games between the US and South Korean militaries. Those exercises continue through April. The country is also conducting a 70-day "loyalty campaign" ahead of a once-in-a-generation ruling party congress in May. The congress could be something of a coming-out party for Kim, a venue to emerge from the shadows of his father and grandfather and more firmly establish himself at home and abroad as North Korea's supreme leader. He could also lay out his own long-term domestic and international agenda. — AP

Embarrassment

At the same time, the rush to declare Turkey "safe" could hardly have come at a more embarrassing time for the EU. President Tayyip Erdogan has stepped up a military crackdown on Kurdish militants, the government has seized Turkey's best-selling newspaper, critical journalists face prosecuand third generation young people of Muslim or north African origin. The place of Islam in public life is fiercely contested in these secular societies, and resentments from Algeria's war of independence still simmer. European politicians may be aghast at the rhetoric of Trump, who has said he wants a database to register and track Muslims in the United States and would bar any Muslim entering the country until Congress could act. But if the pact with Turkey goes through as conceived, the EU will be retreating into a "fortress Europe" policy for fear of its own Trumps. — Reuters

BOMBING EXPOSES DIVISIONS TEARING TURKEY

By Umit Bektas, Nick Tattersall and Humeyra Pamuk

Government resign!" chanted some of the mourners at the funeral yesterday of four young victims of the suicide bombing in Turkey's capital Ankara. "Our child has become a victim of ugly politics. We don't want any politicians at our funeral," one of the relatives called out, before family members hushed him and warned him against speaking out in front of journalists. Far from bringing the nation together in mourning, the aftermath of Sunday night's attack has again laid bare the deep divisions tearing at Turkey as it struggles to avoid being drawn into its neighbors' conflicts.

If Turkey continues on this path, some analysts warn, it risks a cycle of violence and a lurch away from the European standards of freedom and democracy to which it once aspired. President Tayyip Erdogan shows little sign of healing the rifts. Parties from across the political spectrum - from nationalists to the pro-Kurdish opposition - have condemned the car bombing, which killed 37 people in the heart of Ankara and was the third in the city in five months.

But the question of how to respond is far more divisive. Officials quickly blamed Kurdish militants. Turkish warplanes began bombing their camps in northern Iraq within hours, and clashes with the security forces widened in Turkey's predominantly Kurdish southeast. In his first speech since the attack, Erdogan said the country's anti-terrorism laws, already seen by rights groups as too invasive and used in recent months to detain academics and journalists, should be widened further.

"It might be the terrorist who pulls the trigger and detonates the bomb, but it is these supporters and accomplices who allow that attack to achieve its goal," he told a dinner for doctors in his palace late on Monday. "The fact their title is lawmaker, academic, writer, journalist or head of a civil society group doesn't change the fact that individual is a terrorist...We should redefine terror and terrorist as soon as possible and put it in our penal code."

Erdogan's opponents say he is using antiterrorism laws to silence dissent and that his authoritarian leadership is dangerously dividing a nation needed by its European and NATO allies as a bulwark against the instability of the Middle East. Almost as Erdogan spoke in Ankara, police used tear gas and water cannon to disperse several hundred leftist demonstrators in Istanbul who had gathered to protest what they perceive to be the government's failure to prevent Sunday's attack. Some in the crowd began chanting "Thief, Murderer, Erdogan", a rallying cry during the anti-government protests of recent years, prompting police to intervene, Reuters witnesses said.

'Angry Country'

"Turkey has become a country that can neither rejoice nor mourn together, or find a common sense to unite around. It has become an angry country, with ever shrinking and fragmenting tribal outlooks," said

Turkish-British researcher Ziya Meral. "Pressure on media and denials of freedom of expression are only fuelling mistrust, dangerous propaganda and misinformation," Meral, a research fellow at Britain's Sandhurst military academy and founder of the London-based Centre on Religion and Global Affairs, wrote in a blog post.

The ruling AK Party, founded by Erdogan more than a decade ago, was "no longer driven by pragmatism" but by its own survival and its ambition of securing the stronger presidential system that Erdogan wants, he said. Since winning Turkey's first popular presidential election in 2014, Erdogan has lobbied for replacing its parliamentary system with an executive presidency more akin to the United States or France. Many of his supporters, who represent just over half the electorate and see him as champion of the pious working class, believe the narrative that Turkey, battered by regional conflicts, needs strong leadership for its long-term stability. His opponents fear too much power in the hands of a man who brooks no dissent.

Chaos or Stability

Security officials have said the two perpetrators of Sunday's bombing, a man and a woman, were linked to the outlawed Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK), which has waged a three-decade insurgency for Kurdish autonomy in southeast Turkey. Prime Minister Ahmet Davutoglu said the authorities had "very serious and almost certain" evidence suggesting the PKK was responsible. There has been no claim of responsibility. Against a backdrop of rising violence in the southeast, where a PKK ceasefire collapsed in July, the AK Party campaigned for a parliamentary election in November by promising stability if it won, or the risk of chaos if it lost.

It won, clawing back a majority lost five months earlier, but opponents say the victory brought anything but stability. "In the democratic countries of the world, when a bomb goes off, everyone would be side by side, shoulder to shoulder...That is what we are missing," said Selahattin Demirtas, leader of the pro-Kurdish HDP, parliament's third largest party. "They don't give account. They don't apologize. They don't say we made a mistake ... They just keep polarizing."

Yet amid the fragmentation, there are no opposition figures who appear capable of bringing people together. The divisions are ever more keenly felt far beyond the corridors of power. Amedspor, one of the most prominent soccer teams in the southeast, were unable to find rooms for an away match in the central city of Sivas on Tuesday, with hoteliers refusing to take their reservation when they realised who was calling. Eventually the local governor's office found them accommodation 40 km out of town, the team's president, Ali Karakas, told Reuters.

"We're seeing a severing of emotional bonds and this is such a dangerous thing," Karakas said. "Sports should be uniting. Brotherhood and solidarity should be its basis. But because of Turkey's politics, even sport has been poisoned." — Reuters

SHOCK AS FIJI'S SERU 'RAMBO' DIÉS AT 37

SUVA: Former Fiji international Seru Rabeni died yesterday at the age of just 37, rugby officials in the Pacific nation said, prompting shock and tributes from team-mates and fans. Rabeni represented Fiji in the 2003 and 2007 World Cups, combining speed with a brutal tackling style that earned him the nickname "Rambo". He also played top-flight rugby in England, New Zealand and France during a 16-year career which included a five-year spell at Leicester. "Incredibly sad news to hear Seru Rabeni has passed away. Rest in peace big man," Fiji Sevens coach Ben Ryan tweeted. Fiji-born former Wallaby Lote Tugiri said Rabeni was "a great man taken away too young", while ex-Samoa centre Eliota Faumaono-Sapolu said Pacific rugby had lost one of its greats. "Stunned! RIP Seru Rabeni," he tweeted. "Absolutely hated every minute playing against you constantly smashing and stepping me." Scotland's James Hamilton, a former team-mate at Leicester, described Rabeni as "an incredible player and lovely man".England great Jonny Wilkinson, another playing contemporary of Rabeni, tweeted: "Seru Rabeni's passing is incredibly sad. What a player and a team man. Our support and best wishes go to his family.— AFP

ANNIE POWER MAKES AMENDS WITH CHAMP HURDLE TRIUMPH

LONDON: Annie Power atoned for her final fence fall at last year's Cheltenham Festival by leading from start to finish to win the Champion Hurdle yesterday's opening day of the 2016 edition. Ridden by Ruby Walsh and trained by the leading jockey's fellow Irishman Willie Mullins, Annie Power was roared home by enthusiastic supporters at the Prestbury Park course in Cheltenham, south-west England, as she became the first mare to win the Champion Hurdle in 22 years. At last year's Festival, the leading jumps meeting of the English horse-racing season, Annie Power had the separate mares hurdle at her mercy only to fall at the last fence. That would have been the fourth win on the first day for Mullins, and Annie Power's fall was estimated to have saved bookmakers a £50 million ($72 million) payout. But Annie Power never looked in any danger of repeating that error as she became the first mare (female horse) to win the Champion Hurdle since Flakey Dove back in 1994, with Tuesday's 5/2 favorite beating second-placed My Tent or Yours by five lengths. —AFP

JUDY MURRAY QUITS FED CUP CAPTAINCY

LONDON: Judy Murray has given up her role as captain of Great Britain's Fed Cup team, the Lawn Tennis Association announced yesterday. Murray, the mother of British tennis star Andy Murray, was appointed to skipper the side in the Fed Cup-the leading women's international team tennis tournament-in 2011. But while Andy led Britain to victory in last year's Davis Cup, the men's equivalent, Judy was unable to have anything like the same impact from off the court, with her side failing to gain promotion to the elite World Group from the Europe/Africa zone. Judy Murray recently became a grandmother for the first time following the birth of Andy's daughter Sophia last month and has been heavily involved in various schemes to promote grassroots tennis in Britain. Last month, Britain won two Fed Cup matches-despite the absence through illness of Australian Open semi-finalist Johanna Konta-but lost to Belgium with a place in the World Group II play-offs at stake. Afterwards Judy Murray made no secret of her frustration with the format of the competition, the 56-year-old saying: "I'm fed up with it. Everybody wants to get out of this zone.—AFP

KINGS HAMMER SLUMPING BLACKHAWKS 5-0

CHICAGO: Kris Versteeg and Milan Lucic scored 18 seconds handed goals, as Calgary beat St Louis. Sean Monahan had apart in the first period as the Los Angeles Kings beat the two goals and Joe Colborne and Mark Giordano also scored slumping Chicago Blackhawks 5-0 on Monday night. Vincent Lecavalier, Dustin Brown and Tyler Toffoli also scored as Los Angeles improved to 8-2-1 in its last 11 games. Jonathan Quick made 32 saves in his 41st career shutout, helping the Pacific Division leaders kill off each of Chicago's six powerplay opportunities. The Blackhawks (41-23-6) lost for the fourth time in five games, including three in a row against St. Louis, Dallas and Los Angeles - three potential playoff opponents. The defending Stanley Cup champions are just 9-10-2 since their franchise-record 12-game win streak. The slide has dropped Chicago into third in the tough Central Division with just 12 games left on its schedule.

ISLANDERS 3, PANTHERS 2

Cal Clutterbuck scored the tiebreaking goal with 1:39 remaining to cap New York's three-goal third period, lifting the Islanders past Florida. Kyle Okposo and Josh Bailey scored earlier in the third as the Islanders scored all their goals in a 5 1/2-minute stretch after trailing 2-0 heading to the final period. Thomas Greiss finished with 23 saves as the Islanders snapped a two-game skid and pulled one point behind the crosstown-rival Rangers for second place in the Metropolitan Division. Aleksander Barkov had a goal and an assist, Nick Bjugstad also scored and Jonathan Huberdeau had two assists for the Panthers. Roberto Luongo stopped 25 shots.

PREDATORS 3, OILERS 2

James Neal had his sixth career hat trick, leading Nashville to a win over the Oilers. The Predators have earned at least a point in 15 of their last 16 games. They swept the three game season series from Edmonton. Jordan Eberle and liro Pakarinen scored for the Oilers.

FLAMES 7, BLUES 4

Michael Frolik scored three times, included two short-for Calgary. Dougie Hamilton and Johnny Gaudreau each had three assists.

Paul Stastny scored twice and Scottie Upshall and Kevin Shattenkirk each had a goal for St Louis, which had won six straight. Shattenkirk had a power-play goal at 3:28 of the third and Stastny added his second of the game 10 minutes later to pull the Blues to 5-4. Frolik's second score gave the Flames some breathing room with 3:11 remaining and he added an empty-netter with 35 seconds to go for his 14th of the season.

DUCKS 7, DEVILS 1

Jakob Silfverberg scored three goals for his first NHL hat trick, leading Anaheim to a rout of New Jersey. Corey Perry scored his team-high 29th goal, Nick Ritchie had his first in 25 NHL games and Ryan Kesler got the go-ahead goal early in the second period. Andrew Cogliano added a goal and two assists, helping Anaheim beat the Devils for the fifth straight time. The Ducks remained two points behind the Pacific Division-leading Los Angeles Kings, who won 5-0 at Chicago. Former Anaheim forward Devante Smith-Pelly scored for the Devils, unable to complete a sweep of their three-game California trip after a 3-0 win over San Jose and a 2-1 overtime decision against Los Angeles.

JETS 5, CANUCKS 2

Marko Dano had two goals and an assist as Winnipeg beat Vancouver. Tyler Myers and Alexander Burmistrov each added a goal and an assist for the Jets, and Mark Scheifele also scored to extend his points streak to eight games. Mathieu Perreault had two assists and Michael Hutchinson finished with 26 saves. Jared McCann and Jake Virtanen scored for Vancouver, and Jacob Markstrom stopped 24 shots. The Canucks came in having won two straight for the eighth time this season, but failed to get their first threegame winning streak. — AP

IOC RETESTS BEIJING DRUG SAMPLES AHEAD OF GAMES

LONDON: Armed with enhanced techniques, the IOC is retesting hundreds of doping samples from the 2008 Beijing Olympics to weed out drug cheats before they can compete in this year's Summer Games in Rio de Janeiro. In an interview with The Associated Press, IOC medical director Dr Richard Budgett said athletes who competed in Beijing and are likely to be selected for Rio are having their stored samples reanalyzed to catch any violators who evaded detection eight years ago. "We want to protect the clean athletes who are going to be competing in Rio," Budgett said. "We are making sure that athletes who cheated back in 2008 don't get to compete in Rio in 2016."

The International Olympic Committee stores blood and urine samples from each games so they can be reanalyzed years later with improved testing methods. Any positive tests can lead to retroactive sanctions, disqualifications and loss of medals. The statute of limitations for retesting was extended in 2015 from eight to 10 years, meaning the Beijing samples remain valid through 2018. "Many of the athletes who are likely to be selected for Rio will have their samples retested a couple of years earlier than we need to," Budgett told AP on the sidelines of the Tackling Doping in Sport conference in London. "There are some new analyses that are available. The samples are in the process of being retested. It's in the hundreds."

"We've cooperated very closely with the international federations, finding out which athletes are still competing, finding out which athletes are likely to be selected for Rio," he added. "If we've got samples for them from Beijing, we're doing that testing." Budgett said the process should be completed in the next few weeks. "If we have any adverse analytical findings, there will be a sanctioning process and those athletes will be very unlikely to compete in Rio," he said.

Noting that scientific techniques will continue to improve in the next two years, the IOC is keeping the other Beijing samples for retesting closer to the 2018 deadline, Budgett said. It's not the first time that samples from Beijing have been retested. A few months after those games, the IOC reanalyzed nearly 1,000 of the total of 4,000 samples with a new test for the blood-boosting drug CERA. Five athletes were caught, including 1,500-meter gold medalist Rashid Ramzi of Bahrain.

Budgett said some samples from the 2012 London Olympics are also being retested now on a targeted basis ahead of the Rio Games, although most are being saved for later reanalysis. "We want to reserve samples for the expected advances that will happen over the next six years," he said. Nearly 500 doping samples from the 2006 Winter Olympics in Turin have already been retested. The IOC has not disclosed whether those retests had produced any positive cases.

Five athletes were caught in retests of samples from the 2004 Athens Olympics, including men's shot put winner Yuriy Bilonog of Ukraine. On a separate issue, Budgett said he is confident that Brazil's national anti-doping agency will comply with World Anti-Doping Agency rules by next week's deadline to prevent Rio's drug-testing laboratory from being ruled ineligible for the Olympics. The Brazilian agency has until March 18 to meet WADA's guidelines. If it fails, the Rio lab would be declared non-compliant, meaning thousands of doping samples during the games would have to be sent out of Brazil for testing, posing major logistical and financial issues.

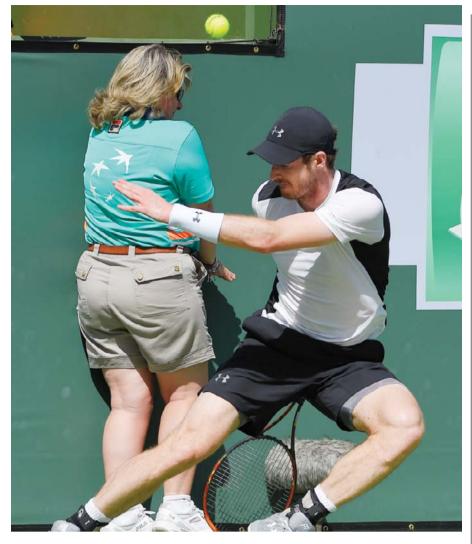

Brazilian President Dilma Rousseff is scheduled to sign a decree on March 15 that would bring the agency into compliance. "We're very hopeful that it finally will be resolved," Budgett said. "The laboratory itself is performing well and really is state-of-the-art. We always have a Plan B. Anything can happen. That's there in case, but I do not expect to be using it." Budgett said the IOC plans to carry out a "similar number" of tests in Rio as the 5,000 conducted in London. An intelligence unit created by WADA is targeting athletes for testing in the lead up to the games. "We're not talking about the numbers any more, we're talking about the quality," Budgett said.—AP

BLACKS PLAYING MEN'S HOOPS AS FOOTBALL LAG BEHIND IN DEGREES

PHILADELPHIA: Young black men playing basketball and football for the country's top college teams are graduating at lower rates than black male students at the same schools - despite having financial and academic support that removes common hurdles preventing many undergraduates from earning a degree, a new report has found. While 58 percent of black male undergraduates at the 65 schools in the Power 5 conferences got degrees within six years, 54 percent of black male student-athletes at the same schools graduated, according to an analysis of the 2014-2015 academic year by University of Pennsylvania researcher Shaun Harper.

Harper said the graduation gap represents a wide and systemic issue worse than isolated scandals seen on individual campuses. "It happens just about everywhere," said Harper, director of Penn's Center for Race and Equity in Education. "Generations of young black men and their parents and families are repeatedly duped by a system that lies to them about what their life chances are and what their athletic outcomes are likely to be." Just as the attention of the sports world shifts to March Madness, the home page for the NCAA's website features data on how few studentathletes are drafted to play professional sports, promoting its efforts to educate college players. The NCAA men's and women's basketball tournaments begin this week. According to estimated data from the NCAA, only 1.2 percent of college men's basketball players are drafted by the NBA and only 1.6 percent of college football players are drafted by the NFL. "Although there is a great deal of interest in basketball this time of year, we think it is important to remind fans of what our mission is - to provide student-athletes educational opportunities that will last a lifetime," Bob Williams, NCAA senior vice president of communications, said in a statement to The Associated Press.— AP

WAWRINKA ADVANCES; MURRAY CRASHES OUT OF INDIAN WELLS

INDIAN WELLS: French Open champ Stan Wawrinka reached the Indian Wells fourth round while world No 2 Andy Murray suffered a shock third-round exit at the hands of claycourt specialist Federico Delbonis on Monday. Wawrinka toppled Andrey Kuznetsov 6-4, 7-6 (7/5) in the third round of the ATP and WTA hardcourt tournament and two-time Grand Slam winner Murray lost 6-4, 4-6, 7-6 (7/3) to 53rd ranked Argentinian Delbonis. Wawrinka, who turns 31 later this month, has won two titles this year in Chennai and Dubai but has never made it past the quarter-finals in Indian Wells, one of the biggest events on the tennis calendar outside of the four Grand Slams.

Wawrinka next faces 15th seeded David Goffin of Belgium, who beat Guido Pella 4-6, 6-3, 6-2. Murray's exit left things wide open in the bottom half of the men's draw, where Wawrinka, Richard Gasquet, Marin Cilic, Milos Raonic and Tomas Berdych all advanced. Wawrinka is on a nine-match win streak in finals after beating Marcos Baghdatis in Dubai. He captured his third consecutive Chennai crown in January. Last year he won four titles, including his stunning 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4 upset win over world No. 1 Novak Djokovic to claim his first French Open crown.

layoff. Murray's forehand on match point sailed well wide and long, ending the two hour, 46 minute contest on Stadium Court. "He came up with some good passing shots. I could have done a bit more with the volleys and my serve," Murray said. "He moved better than what I expected."

French eighth seed Gasquet continued his mastery over Alexandr Dogopolov by rallying for a 2-6, 6-2, 6-1 win to improve to 3-0 lifetime against the 29th ranked Ukrainian. With his victory in Montpellier earlier this year, Gasquet moved to second place among Frenchmen in the Open Era with 13 career titles. Canada's Raonic barely had to break a sweat against Australian Bernard Tomic, who retired in the second set with a wrist injury. Raonic is trying to improve on his previous best performance in Indian Wells, a semi-final loss to Roger Federer last year. The 25-year-old Canadian, winner in Brisbane this year, was up 3-0 in the second set in the third round tie, after cruising through the first at 6-2, when Tomic called it quits.

Azarenka advances

In women's action, Indian Wells 2012 champion Victoria Azarenka, seeded 13th, defeated China's Zhang Shuai 6-4, 6-3. But the event lost another top seed as Swiss seventh seed Belinda Bencic fell to Slovakia's Magdalena Rybarikova 6-4, 3-6, 6-3. Johanna Konta rolled to a 6-4, 6-1 win over Denisa Allertova, who sent women's second seed Angelique Kerber crashing out on Saturday. Just three of the top seven women's seeds are left in the draw, including world number one Serena Williams.—AFP

SPORTS WARRIORS MARK CURRY'S BIRTHDAY WITH 60TH WIN

HOOD, JAZZ SHOOT DOWN CAVALIERS

OAKLAND: Stephen Curry had 27 points, five rebounds and five assists on his 28th birthday as the Golden State Warriors beat the New Orleans Pelicans 125-107 on Monday for their record 49th straight regular-season home victory. Draymond Green added 14 points and 12 rebounds for the Warriors (60-6), who are 31-0 at Oracle Arena this season. With 16 games to go, they remain one game ahead of the 1995-96 Chicago Bulls' pace in their record 72-win season. Birthday songs, MVP chants and a serenade and piece of cake from his toddler daughter, Riley, made it a great night for Curry - all after his fifth Western Conference Player of the Week award this season and second in two weeks. He shot 4 for 9 from 3point range and 10 of 16 overall. Anthony Davis had 22 points and 11 rebounds for the Pelicans.

THUNDER 128, TRAIL BLAZERS 94

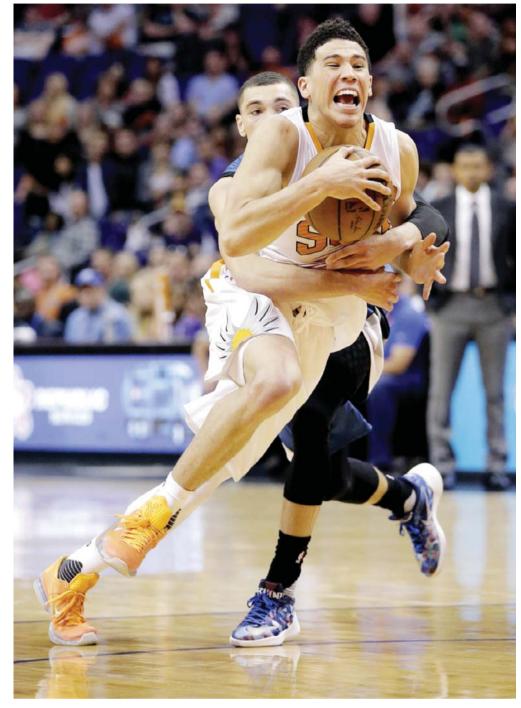

Russell Westbrook had 17 points, 16 assists and 10 rebounds in his 12th triple-double of the season as Oklahoma City beat Portland. Westbrook had the 31st triple-double of his career and matched Sacramento's Rajon Rondo for the most assists without a turnover in a game this season. Enes Kanter scored a season-high 26 points, Kevin Durant added 20 and Serge Ibaka had 15 for the Thunder, whose 45th win matched their victory total from last season. Oklahoma City shot a season-high 59 percent from the field. Damian Lillard scored 21 points and C.J. McCollum added 15 for the Trail Blazers, who have lost five of seven. Portland shot a season-low 34.1 percent from the field.

JAZZ 94, CAVALIERS 85

Rodney Hood scored 28 points as Utah, playing without leading scorer Gordon Hayward, beat Cleveland. The Jazz remained two games behind the Houston Rockets and Dallas Mavericks for the last Western Conference playoff spot, while the Cavaliers stayed 2 1/2 games ahead of Toronto in the East. The Jazz led most of the game but went into the fourth quarter tied at 66. Utah went on a 16-2 run midway through the period, led by 10 points from Trey Lyles, to take an 86-73 lead. The Cavs never recovered. Hayward missed his first game of the season with plantar fasciitis in his right foot but Hood picked up the slack. LeBron James had 23 points and 12 rebounds for the Cavaliers and Kyrie Irving chipped in 15 points.

MAVERICKS 107, HORNETS 96

Chandler Parsons had 24 points and nine rebounds as Dallas ended Charlotte's seasonhigh, seven-game winning streak. Dirk Nowitzki added 23 points and 11 rebounds for the Mavericks, who moved back above .500 after losing five straight games. Deron Williams chipped in with 15 points. Kemba Walker had 25 points and nine assists, Nicolas Batum scored 20 points and Marvin Williams added 19 for the Hornets. Dallas, which was just 3 of 20 from 3point range in the first three quarters, hit 6 of 10 3s in the fourth quarter. After averaging more than 36 points in the first quarter in its previous three games, Charlotte made just 27 percent of its shots from the field and 43 percent from the foul line in the first half to fall behind 52-33

E'Twaun Moore and Nikola Mirotic added 17 points apiece as Chicago swept Toronto in the series for the second straight season, handing the Raptors just their second loss in their last 16 games at home. Toronto's last win against Chicago was on Dec 31, 2013. Jimmy Butler scored 13 points on 5-of-18 shooting after missing three games because of knee soreness. Kyle Lowry had 33 points and 11 rebounds for Toronto, which also got 27 points from DeMar DeRozan. McDermott nearly matched the season-best 30 points he scored against the Raptors in a 116-106 win last month in Chicago. The second-year forward hasn't scored more than 20 points in any other game this season.

ROCKETS 130, GRIZZLIES 81

Donatas Motiejunas scored 18 points and Trevor Ariza 16 as Houston coasted to its most lopsided win of the season. The Rockets, who never trailed, were up by 24 at halftime and used a 32-point third quarter to extend the lead to 97-54. Houston cleared the bench to start the fourth guarter with the game well in hand. The largest margin of victory in franchise history is 52 points and the Rockets almost tied it on Monday but JaMychal Green made a 3-pointer with 5.2 seconds left to cut the lead to 49. Lance Stephenson missed the game with a sprained right wrist, joining a bevy of other players sitting out with injuries including Mike Conley, Zach Randolph, Marc Gasol, Chris Andersen, Brandan Wright and Vince Carter.

HEAT 124, NUGGETS 119

Justise Winslow scored 20 points and fellow rookie Josh Richardson added 17 as Miami held off Denver. Dwyane Wade scored 19 points and Joe Johnson added 18 for the Heat. Hassan Whiteside finished with another double-double off the bench, scoring 12 of his 18 points in the fourth quarter and adding 10 rebounds. Kenneth Faried matched the best single-game shooting effort in the NBA this season, going 11 for 11 and finishing with 24 points and 11 rebounds. Emmanuel Mudiay had 23 points and 10 assists for Denver, which had its four-game winning streak snapped. Gary Harris finished with 18 for Denver.

WIZARDS 124, PISTONS 81

John Wall had 15 points and 12 assists as Washington routed Detroit to end a five-game losing streak and gain ground in the playoff race. Nene scored a season-high 20 points off the bench to lead seven Wizards players in double figures during Washington's biggest win and Detroit's worst loss of the season. Bradley Beal added 12 points in his return after missing three games with a sprained pelvis, helping the 10th-

NFL OFFICIAL ACKNOWLEDGES CTE-FOOTBALL TRAUMA LINK

WASHINGTON: An NFL official has acknowledged a link between football and the brain disease CTE for the first time. Jeff Miller, the NFL's senior vice president for health and safety, spoke about the connection during an appearance Monday at a congressional committee's roundtable discussion about concussions. Rep Jan Schakowsky (D-Illinois) asked Miller: "Do you think there is a link between football and degenerative brain disorders like CTE?"

Miller began by referencing the work of Boston University neuropathologist Dr. Ann McKee, who has found CTE in the brains of 90 former pro football players. "Well, certainly, Dr. McKee's research shows that a number of retired NFL players were diagnosed with CTE, so the answer to that question is certainly 'yes,' but there are also a number of questions that come with that," Miller said. Schakowsky repeated the question: "Is there a link?" "Yes. Sure," Miller responded.

The NFL had not previously linked playing football to chronic traumatic encephalopathy, a disease linked to repeated brain trauma and associated with symptoms such as memory loss, depression and progressive dementia. It can only be detected after death. Among the players found to have CTE in their brains were Hall of Famers Junior Seau and Ken Stabler. During Super Bowl week, Dr. Mitch Berger, a member of the NFL's head, neck and spine committee, would not draw a direct line from football to CTE. Miller appeared at a roundtable discussion of concussions before the House Committee on Energy & Commerce. ESPN first reported Miller's appearance before the committee.

Last month, Berger, chair of the department of neurological surgery at the University of California-San Francisco, repeatedly said that while the types of degenerative changes to the brain associated with CTE have been found in late football players, such signs have also been found "in all spectrums of life." Tao, a protein that indicates the presence of CTE, "is found in brains that have traumatic injuries," Berger said, "whether it's from football, whether it's from car accidents, whether it's from gunshot wounds, domestic violence - it remains to be seen." Miller said he was "not going to speak for Dr. Berger" when asked by Schakowsky about those comments.

Just before Miller spoke, McKee was asked the same question about the link between hits in football and CTE. She responded "unequivocally" there is, and went into details about her research findings. Miller told the committee that the issue's entire scope needs to be addressed. "You asked the question whether I thought there was a link," he said. "Certainly based on Dr McKee's research, there's a link, because she's found CTE in a number of retired football players. I think that the broader point, and the one that your question gets to, is what that necessarily means and where do we go from here with that information."—AP

BUOYANT BANGLADESH BID to turn screw on Pakistan

KOLKATA: Bangladesh will look to compound the misery of beleaguered Pakistan today in their opening group match of the World Twenty20, fresh from humbling their arch-rivals in the Asia Cup. Despite their recent improvements in 50-over cricket, Bangladesh have a rotten record in the World T20 and have never beaten Pakistan in the premier tournament of cricket's shortest format. But they will fancy their chances like never before at Kolkata's Eden Gardens against a team who are on a miserable run and whose preparations have been hit by their late arrival in India in a row over security.

Bangladesh cruised through last week's preliminary round and know that a victory over Pakistan will set them up nicely if they are to make the semi-finals for the first time. Star batsman Tamim Igbal is in the form of his life, scoring Bangladesh's first ever international T20 century in Sunday's victory over Oman after scores of 83 and 47 in the first two games. Fans in the cricket-mad nation held impromptu street parties earlier this month when Bangladesh clinched a five-wicket win over Pakistan in Dhaka, sealing a place in the final of the Asia Cup which they lost to India.

Bangladesh was part of Pakistan before a brutal 1971 war of separation, and matches between the sides therefore always have an extra edge to them. Mashrafe Mortaza's side can expect strong support from their fellow Bengalis in what is the capital of the Indian state of West Bengal. But Afridi has been making his own overtures towards the locals by claiming his team has received more "love" from fans in India than back home, comments that incensed former Pakistan skipper Javed Miandad.

Backing for Boom Boom

Pakistan coach Waqar Younis said that the team's troubled build-up to the tournament did not mean they should be written off. "We're the kind of team that once we get the momentum going, we can surprise people," Younis said in a pre-match press conference. The former bowling great also backed the big-hitting Afridi to rediscover the kind of form with the bat that earned him the nickname Boom Boom. "It takes less than a minute to lose form and to get it back as well

T20 cricket is like that, we're hoping that he's one innings away from getting back his old form," said Younis. Bangladesh's build-up has been serene in comparison to the dramas in Pakistan's camp. But after seeing off Oman, the Netherlands and Ireland in the preliminaries, Mortaza knows the hard work now begins in a group that includes India, Australia and New Zealand. "In that group you can't make any mistakes, you have to be up to the mark everywhere," said the veteran bowler.— AFP

India than back home, saying critics should stop stirring up trouble. Former Pakistani captain Javed Miandad has been at the forefront of the outrage over Afridi's comments at the weekend shortly after the team's delayed arrival for the World Twenty20 being played in India.

But Younis said Afridi's critics were making something out of nothing and he should not be criticized for wearing his heart on his sleeve. "This is something he felt. It's his emotions," the former fast bowler told reporters in Kolkata on the eve of Pakistan's opening match in the World Twenty20 against Bangladesh. "I believe we should leave it at that rather than creating a controversy out of nothing. We are here to play cricket, to beat teams," he said ahead of Pakistan's opening rubber against Bangladesh. "My message to the boys is just leave everything behind. This is about playing some quality cricket and playing for the nation."

PAKISTAN'S COACH BACKS

AFRIDI ON INDIA LOVE ROW

In a press conference in Kolkata on Sunday, Afridi said that Pakistan had always enjoyed playing in India and "have been loved by Indians crowds more than crowds back home in Pakistan." The comments raised eyebrows as Pakistan's build-up to the tournament has been embroiled in controversy over whether they would be allowed to travel to archrivals India. They agreed to take the trip only after negotiations with India over security arrangements and the shifting of their match against the hosts to Kolkata from Dharamsala.

Diplomatic tensions between the two countries have meant that the two teams have not played any bilateral series for more than three years, and their rivalry is restricted to multi-national tournaments such as the World T20. India's batting great Sunil Gavaskar on Tuesday said Afridi's comments would help dull the hostility of the usually raucous home crowd at Eden Gardens, the venue for the much-awaited India-Pakistan tie on March 19. "Emotions run high whenever India play Pakistan," Gavaskar told the NDTV news network. "He (Afridi) said nice things-maybe you need it, maybe you don't. It will help as far as the crowd is concerned. It has ensured the crowds won't be overly hostile to him and the Pakistani team." — AFP

ENGLAND'S MORGAN FEELS FOR SUSPENDED NARINE

MUMBAI: England skipper Eoin Morgan voiced sympathy yesterday for West Indies spinner Sunil Narine after the number one-ranked bowler pulled out of the World Twenty20 following his suspension for a suspect action. The West Indies' hopes of winning the tournament were dealt a severe blow last month when Narine withdrew from the squad, saying he was not ready to return to the international fold after work to remodel his action. But while Narine's absence from the World T20 is something of a relief for Morgan's team who play the West Indies in their opening match on Wednesday, the England skipper said he felt for his former teammate.

"I think it's a very touchy subject. I know Sunil. I'm not pleased to see what he's going through. I wouldn't wish it upon anybody," Morgan told reporters in Mumbai. The 27-year-old Trinidadian was suspended in November after being cited during a match in Sri Lanka for a suspect bowling action, the second time he has been reported for an illegal action.

Morgan and Narine have played together for the Kolkata Knight Riders in the Indian Premier League (IPL), a competition in which the spinner has regularly bamboozled opponents. "He's bowled the same way since he was probably 15 or 16 years old. The fact he's got to this stage in his career and it's only being looked at now is probably disappointing from his point of view," said Morgan. "But there are set rules in place that are being applied."

West Indies skipper Darren Sammy acknowledged in his pre-match press conference that Narine would be a big loss, along with allrounder Kieron Pollard who also pulled out of the squad after an injury setback."It's always really difficult to replace someone like Narine or Pollard who have so much experience here," said Sammy. "Yes we'll miss them, but it creates another opportunity for somebody else to step up to the plate."

Despite not playing since November, Narine is still way ahead of his nearest rivals in the T20 international rankings. Narine was a key member of the West Indies team which won the 2012 World T20, taking three wickets for just nine runs in the final against Sri Lanka in Colombo. He is one of a number of leading bowlers who are absent from this year's tournament, including Pakistan's former world number one Saeed Ajmal who has struggled with a remodeled action after being reported in 2014.— AFP

FRENCH PM OPPOSES BENZEMA'S RETURN TO THE NATIONAL TEAM

PARIS: French Prime Minister Manuel Valls yesterday said Real Madrid star Karim Benzema should not be allowed to return to the France team while he remains at the centre of a sex-tape bribery inquiry. "I think that the conditions have not yet been met for Karim Benzema to come into the France team. He is still under investigation," Valls told French broadcaster RMC. Benzema, 28, is France's leading goalscorer, but has been excluded from national duty since he was placed under investigation over an attempt to bribe France teammate Mathieu Valbuena for a sex-tape. Benzema has been accused of complicity in the attempt.

"For young people, a great sportsman must be exemplary," the Prime Minister said, adding "(football) is our heritage, it's not something that just interests amateur sports fans, so we have to be careful, all acts and decisions have their importance". Valls, whose words echoed those of France's Sports Minister Patrick Kanner on Monday, added: "At the same time it is a decision for the French football federation and the coach." Benzema, whose hopes of playing at Euro 2016 had received a huge boost after his bail conditions were eased last week, later took to Twitter to express his frustration at Valls' comments.

"12 seasons that I'm professionnal: 541 matches played 0 red card 11 yellow cards III And some talk about me being exemplary???" Benzema tweeted. France coach Didier Deschamps has made no secret of his desire to see Benzema return to the national team set-up, after the striker was indefinitely suspended by the French Football Federation (FFF) in December. "On a sporting plan, I want to have the best players. You're not a striker at Real Madrid for five years with (Jose) Mourinho, (Carlo) Zidane for nothing. All the countries envy us," Deschamps told French daily L'Equipe recently.

'A great player'

Former France winger Franck Ribery backed Benzema's bid to return to play in the blue shirt. "Karim is a great player, he showed that at Real Madrid and with the France team," said Ribery during a Bayern Munich press conference. "I read that Didier Deschamps wants to take the best to the Euro and Karim certainly belongs to that group." On Friday, an appeals court upheld an investigating magistrate's decision to lift restrictions placed on Benzema that prevented him from coming into contract with Lyon midfielder Valbuena, who was the target of the blackmail attempt.

The FFF said the decision to lift the legal restrictions was "a first step", but added that it would wait to see how the investigation unfolded before deciding whether to recall Benzema. A final decision will be taken by FFF president Noel Le Graet. Meanwhile, publishing company Panini confirmed they have included Valbuena and not Benzema among the 20 France players present in their traditional sticker album for Euro 2016.

"At the time we made our choice, Karim Benzema was not selected," explained Panini France marketing manager Isabelle Fillon at Tuesday's launch. But Panini France president Alain Guerrini said the door remained open for his inclusion. "When we had to give up on including Benzema's picture that was a problem because he's a major player," Guerrini admitted. "If by chance Benzema is called up for France, it suits us perfectly. He's popular with young people and that would give us a marketing coup since there would be an update 'set',

ITALY COACH CONTE TO QUIT, OPENING UP CHELSEA MOVE

ROME: Italy coach Antonio Conte, who has been linked to Chelsea, will give up his post after Euro 2016, the Italian Football Federation said vesterday. The 46-year-old former Juventus coach took over the national team in August 2014 and secured their qualification for the European Championship. Federation president Carlo Tavecchio told Italian media: "Antonio Conte has told me that at the end of the European championship, his job will end. He feels the need for the pitch, the everyday training, and this is something you can understand."

SPORTS

The news fueled speculation that Conte, who won three Serie A titles with Juventus, will be appointed manager of English Premier League side Chelsea following the tournament in France from June 10 to July 10. British and Italian media reports say that Chelsea have an accord with Conte, even adding that he will take his long term assistants Angelo Alessio and Massimo Carrera with him to London. Chelsea are having the worst season of Roman Abramovich's 13-year ownership. They sacked Jose Mourinho in December and interim boss Guus Hiddink has had to take the team from just above the relegation zone to 10th place. Conte took over a demoralized Azzurri side following their humiliating first round exit from the World Cup in Brazil.

He confidently succeeded in his first task of qualifying for the European Championships. Italy advanced to the finals with ease by dominating their group which included Bulgaria, Norway, Croatia, Azerbaidjan and Malta, with seven wins and three draws. Conte's Italy defense, with a Juventus core of Gianluigi Buffon, Leonardo Bonucci and Andrea Barzagli, proved solid, the coach has come under fire for his lacklustre forward line that managed just 16 goals in 10 qualifying games. before the tournament gets underway, the team remains a work in progress.

In France, the Italians have been drawn in Group E along with Belgium, Sweden and the Republic of Ireland. Italy were beaten by world number one ranked team Belgium in a friendly last November, demonstrating the gap between Conte's side and the top European teams. Conte has also clashed with Italian football chiefs. He had hoped to organize a training camp in February and wanted the Italian Cup final brought forward to allow international players involved to take holidays. Both requests were turned down to Conte's fury. Former Italy coaches Roberto Donadoni and Cesare Prandelli have both been named as possible replacements for Conte along with Claudio Ranieri, manager of surprise Premier League leaders Leicester. —AFP

YOUNG AFGHAN BOXER PACKS A PUNCH AGAINST PATRIARCHY

KABUL: Nineteen-year-old Afghan boxer Sadaf Rahimi slams her punching bag deep in the bowels of Kabul's Ghazi stadium, dealing blows to gender stereotyping and doing her part to to exorcise history: it was on these very grounds that the Taleban carried out public executions. Sadaf, whose shy gaze seems at odds with her muscular 60kg (130lb) frame, pulls on her gloves. A liberating spasm accompanies each blow that crushes the leather mitts of Agha Gul Alamyar, one of her trainers. Sadaf is a brilliant boxer. But she is also an exception in this conservative Muslim country where women participating in sport remains a taboo.

Her black pirate bandana serves not just to hold her hair in place, but to cover it. "I also wear a scarf in my everyday life because we live in a conservative country," she says. The Taleban's regime, known for its brutal treatment of women, was toppled in 2001 by a US-led military alliance. Since then, women's rights have improved, but a bitter patriarchal aftertaste remains for many Afghan women pressured to stay at home to cook and raise children. At all of 19 years of age-seven of which she has spent in the ring-Sadaf sees a moral obligation "to prove that men and women can be equal. Girls are not forced to stay at home".

Going back in time

Born to a middle-class family from the Tajik ethnic group, Sadaf had to first make the case for boxing-which she discovered by watching Mike Tyson and Laila Ali on TVto those closest to her. "At first my family was opposed to me boxing. They were saying: 'Why is a girl boxing? She should stay home, do the chores and cook.' My aunt is still against it," recalls the young woman, who is also pursuing a degree in economics. She is taking a stand on misogyny and against the darkest hours of Afghan history, by training inside Ghazi stadium which the Taleban used for their public executions during their 1996 to 2001 regime.

One of these executions was filmed in secret in 1999. The images show a woman, Zarmina, being executed by Kalashnikov fire for having killed her violent husband. "It's a pleasure to train her," says Agha Gul Alamyar, Sadaf's trainer. Like other young women, Sadaf has to contend with poor equipment and basic infrastructure. The mats are threadbare and the gloves and punching bags are old and worn out. "We lack everything, gloves, boots. There is no encouragement for the girls," he says. The federation currently counts only 20 women in its ranks.

Thirst for gold

In an effort to boost the sport among women, Sadaf wants to set up her own club and become a trainer. But first she must mount the podium in international competitions, a distant dream. She has already brought home three bronze medals in regional competitions, but isn't yet up to Olympic standard-the sport's Holy Grail. In 2012, Sadaf lied in order to accept an invitation by the Olympics organizer. But the International Boxing Association eventually did not allow her to leave for London, fearing her better trained opponents could seriously injure her. And this year, she won't be going to Rio. This time around the reasons are more prosaic-her defeat in the South Asian Games in India in mid February means she won't be Olympics bound. "I am disappointed," she said. "In India I was completely alone. No trainer came with me, I had no support at all. — AFP

ELKESON DOUBLE FIRES SHANGHAI TOP

SHANGHAI: Brazilian forward Elkeson's double strike fired Shanghai SIPG to the top of their AFC Champions League group with a 2-1 win over Gamba Osaka yesterday. Elkeson, off-loaded by reigning Asian champions Guangzhou Evergrande in January, looked an increasingly important signing as he sealed SIPG's second win in Group G. It was enough for Sven-Goran Eriksson's side to leapfrog Melbourne Victory, who were held 0-0 by South Korea's Suwon Samsung Bluewings in a combative contest earlier.

Elkeson put SIPG ahead with a finish from close range on 41 minutes as the home side dominated. And after his Brazilian opposite number Patric nodded Gamba level on the hour-mark, Elkeson popped up again with the match-winning strike just two minutes later. The decisive goal may have made uncomfortable viewing for Evergrande fans as it came from a cross by Dario Conca, Elkeson's former team-mate at the Asian and Chinese titleholders.

Meanwhile big-spending Chinese team Jiangsu Suning's unconvincing campaign remained stuck in second gear with a 0-0 draw away to FC Tokyo. Asia's record signing Alex Teixeira failed to inspire the visitors, who were missing ex-Chelsea midfielder Ramires following a red card in their previous outing. Instead it was FC Tokyo who looked likelier to win, with goalkeeper Zhang Sipeng forced into a reaction save in the second half and Hiroki Kawano seeing a deflected header drop just wide.

The draw left Jiangsu second in Group E behind 2006 champions Jeonbuk Hyundai Motors, who beat bottom-placed Vietnamese outfit Binh Duong 2-0.In Melbourne, A-League champions Victory were frustrated by a disciplined Suwon defense, although the goalless draw meant they remained unbeaten in their three games so far. Chances were at a are difficult to break down but we did create premium with Kwak Hee-Ju man-marking leading Victory scorer Besart Berisha so closely that he didn't have any shots at goal in the 90 minutes. "They are a very difficult team to break down, they're so disciplined," Victory coach Kevin Muscat said.

"When you're that disciplined and you've got a work ethic like Suwon have then they some decent chances, particularly in the first half." Victory veteran Archie Thompson had the ball in the back of the net in the 53rd minute after heading in from a corner, but was ruled offside. Singapore referee Muhammad Taqi brandished the yellow card six times in a physical contest but also let the game flow.—AFP

PALESTINIAN CHILD SURVIVOR TO MEET REAL MADRID STARS

RAMALLAH: A Palestinian boy who survived a firebombing by Jewish extremists that killed his parents and brother will trael to meet Real Madrid stars including his idol Cristiano Ronaldo. Five-year-old Ahmed Dawabsha, his uncle and his grandparents were to fly from the Jordanian capital Amman to Spain, his grandfather said.

"We have been invited by Real Madrid, but we don't know yet which day we will be able to meet the players," Hussein Dawabsha said. Palestinian Football Association head Jibril Rajoub welcomed the "superb humanitarian gesture by Real Madrid, its administration and Cristiano Ronaldo, who are restoring hope for a child who lost his entire family." "There is an unknown soldier in this initiative and that is Zinedine Zidane, who we warmly thank," he said of the Real Madrid coach.

The July 31 attack on the Dawabsha family home in the village of Duma in the occupied West Bank killed 18-month-old Ali Saad Dawabsha and fatally wounded his parents. Ahmed, who was hospitalized after the attack with severe burns, was the sole survivor from the immediate family. "He has just spent eight months in hospital," his grandfather said. "He is doing better, but a lot of time and care is still needed for him to truly recover." The attack drew renewed attention to Jewish extremism and accusations Israel had not done enough to prevent such violence. It also sparked international condemnation and worsened tensions between Israelis and Palestinians. Palestinians moved by images of the bandaged boy wearing a Real Madrid jersey campaigned for months on social media to convince the team to meet Ahmed. The team signaled in January that it would be able to organize such a meeting. Ronaldo's rival Lionel Messi was similarly moved by the plight of another five-year-old boy. The Afghan boy won the Internet's heart when he was pictured wearing a plastic bag as an improvised Messi jersey. Murtaza Ahmadi later travelled with his family to Kabul to receive two jerseys autographed by the Barcelona star and presented to the young fan by UNICEF.—AFP

BARCA CLASH HIGHLIGHTS ARSENAL'S MISSED SUAREZ CHANCE

BARCELONA: Arsenal manager Arsene Wenger admitted his side face an almost impossible task when they travel to face a red-hot Barcelona today looking to overturn a 2-0 first-leg deficit to reach the Champions League quarter-finals for the first time in six years. As so often in the second half of Wenger's 20-year reign, Arsenal will travel to the Camp Nou with a sense of what might have been.

They had their chances to lead at the Emirates three weeks ago before Barca's brilliant forward triumvirate of Lionel Messi, Neymar and Luis Suarez cut through them with an unerring ease they have made routine. Messi, Neymar and Suarez have scored a combined 103 goals this season, Arsenal's entire squad a mere 71. Top of the list of Wenger's detractors has been his inability or unwillingness to splash out on the topclass striker needed to turn Arsenal from perennial pretenders into winners.

Yet, he tried to land Suarez whilst the Uruguayan was still at Liverpool in 2013. In a tale of Arsenal's penny-pinch culture under Wenger, they infuriated Liverpool by launching a bid one pound over Suarez's reported £40 million buyout clause. "What do you think they're smoking over there at Emirates?" Liverpool's American owner John W Henry famously replied on Twitter.

Even more damming for Arsenal was that Liverpool captain Steven Gerrard managed to talk Suarez into staying for an extra season at Anfield by telling him he was "too good for Arsenal" and that his move to Barcelona would come. Gerrard was proved right. Inspired by Suarez's 31 Premier League goals, Liverpool agonizingly just missed out on their first title in 24 years. At the same time Barca had just suffered their first trophyless season in six years.

Suarez then bit Italian defender Giorgio Chiellini at the 2014 World Cup, the third time he had bitten an opponent in his career, sparking widespread condemnation and a four-month ban. Yet, whilst others dithered, Barca pounced, eying exactly Suarez's aggression as the tonic to revitalize the squad already blessed with the talents of Messi and Neymar. "During the negotiation process the incident with Chiellini happened and provoked a lot of doubts in clubs that wanted to sign him because they questioned his character and didn't know the severity of the ban," Barca's then sporting director Andoni Zubizarreta told Marca.

"I thought that was the ideal moment to accelerate the process of his signing." Arsenal benefited in their own way from Suarez's move as they snapped up Alexis Sanchez as Barca sold the Chilean to balance the books. Yet, by swapping Sanchez for Suarez, Barca again demonstrated that they shop in a different market to Arsenal and haven't looked back since. Sanchez won two major trophies in three years at Barca, coinciding with the Catalans only three-year drought in winning Champions League in the past decade.

His 47 goals in 141 games were a respectable return, but Suarez has already struck 67 in 84 appearances, won a treble and has Barca on course to repeat that feat this season. "Suarez gives Barca the aggression that is so important in the attacking third," Atletico Madrid boss Diego Simeone said after seeing his impressive record against Barca turned upside down since Suarez's arrival. Most importantly of all, Suarez has managed to succeed where other great strikers like Zlatan Ibrahimovic and David Villa have failed in dovetailing perfectly with Messi.

"Our relationship on and off the field is very good," Suarez told La Vanguardia. "We all know Leo is the best, none of us try to beat him or even equal him." Yet, on goalscoring terms at least, Suarez has surpassed Messi this season with 42 in 41 games to the Argentine's 36 in 36.

Stopping one is difficult, stopping all three of the South American trio has been an impossible task in the past 18 months. Arsenal could have had Suarez on their side. Instead, when they line-up today, they will likely be made to suffer and wonder what could've have been once more.—AFF

BAYERN WANT NO REPEAT OF JUVE TURIN FIGHTBACK

BERLIN: Bayern Munich host Juventus today in the Champions League last 16 return-leg clash eager to cut out any mistakes and prevent a repeat of the Italians' first-leg fight back. Bayern host the Italian champions at the Allianz Arena looking to seal their fifth consecutive quarter-final appearance in the Champions League. They were steaming towards the last eight when Thomas Mueller and Arjen Robben gave them a two-goal lead in Turin before Juventus pounced on mistakes in Munich's ranks with goals by Paulo Dybala and Stefano Sturaro.

Juventus are in rich form, unbeaten in their last 19 games, but coach Massimiliano Allegri suffered a set back on Monday when Italy midfielder Claudio Marchisio dropped out of training with a calf injury. Dybala is also out and Allegri was already missing defenders Giorgio Chiellini and Martin Caceres, while former Bayern striker Mario Mandzukic is nursing a knock. Both Bayern coach Pep Guardiola and captain Philipp Lahm have warned the Germans can ill afford committing more mistakes for Juventus to again exploit. And ex-Bayern coach Ottmar Hitzfeld says the Italians are more than capable of pulling off an upset in Munich.

"After leading Juventus by 2-0, the 2-2 is not an ideal result," Hitzfeld told Munichbased newspaper TZ. "They have build Juventus back up again and they'll believe in their chances again. "Bayern is vulnerable on the break and Juventus will be lurking and 100% ready to take their chances." Mainz proved just how vulnerable Bayern are when they became the only side to win at the Allianz Arena this season with a 2-1 victory just over a fortnight ago. Bayern lost despite enjoying 78 percent possession and firing in 17 shots on goal and Juventus' analysts will noted the way Mainz patiently took their chances.—AFP

THAI MONK LUCKY CHARMS HELP LEICESTER OUTFOX OPPONENTS

BANGKOK: Leicester City's inexorable climb luck in the game, for the management team up the Premier League has left many pun- and the players," the 64-year-old monk, who dits scratching their heads wondering what the key to their success is. But Thai monk Phra Prommangkalachan knows at least one of those secrets: good karma. For the last three years, he and some half a dozen fellow Buddhist monks have been making regular trips to the Thai-owned club to bless the pitch and hand out lucky talismans to players.

"I hang some amulets on their necks and I gave them these fabric talismans," he said at a temple in Bangkok, the banners emblazoned with sacred patterns and Leicester's club crest at their centre. "I'm not sure if they understood what I explained to them about it, but they knew that it would bring them luck," he added. Currently riding high at the top of the world's most watched football league, Leicester are owned by Thai duty-free magnate Vichai Srivaddhanaprabha, whose King Power brand is on the front of the club shirt.

Their rise is one of the biggest David v Goliath sporting tales in recent memoryand a success story for Thailand, where they are dubbed the Siamese Foxes. Vichai bought the club in 2010 and after a few false starts, the team gained promotion to the Premier League at whose summit they now sit. The retail magnate's boardroom has won praise for its unflustered approach to running the club and shrewd appointments of players and managers. But Vichai himself is notoriously publicity shy and has averred the usual fanfare of a PR campaign associated with foreign ownership of Premier League clubs.

Phra Prommangkalachan says the billionaire is a devout Buddhist and a firm believer in the power of karma. "He brought monks there to pray for auspiciousness and said he has made at least 10 trips to the club, explained. Majority Buddhist Thailand is a country steeped in the belief that luck and good fortune come through merit making, which is accumulated through prayers, offerings, donations and good deeds.

Steady stream of visitors

The deeply superstitious culture also revels in the power of lucky charms, with amulets blessed by monks visible everywhere, often dangling from people's chests or their rearview mirrors. As AFP spoke to Phra Prommangkalachan at the white marbled temple where he is based, a steady stream of devotees came to seek his blessing and purchase amulets. His aides said he often gets visitors from China and Malaysia.

And while such customs might initially have appeared strange to the club, Phra Prommangkalachan says Leicester's players soon got used to the sight of saffron robed monks stalking the halls of the King Power Stadium." They were glad to see the monks going there. They greeted us and joined the ceremony very well," he said "Even though we're of different religions, we are close to one another like good friends."

Five points clear of Tottenham with eight matches remaining, attention now turns to whether Leicester can keep up their tabletopping form and clinch the title. Helped by the power of his amulets and talismans, Phra Prommangkalachan said he is confident the club's players have the "stamina and strong mind to play and keep fighting hard". Will Leicester win the league? "The team will be the number one in the Premier League this year for sure," he said, raising a single index finger and breaking out into a wide grin.—AFP

OKAZAKI UPSTAGES BENITEZ AS LEICESTER MARCH ON 1-0

LEICESTER: Shinji Okazaki's stunning goal upstaged new Newcastle United manager Rafael Benitez as Leicester City reasserted a five-point lead in the Premier League with a tight 1-0 victory on Monday. Benitez was taking charge of Newcastle for the first time since being appointed as the successor to the sacked Steve McClaren on a three-year contract, but it was Japan international Okazaki, 29, who stole the headlines with an acrobatic 25th-minute overhead kick.

Okazaki's sixth goal of the season took Leicester five points clear of Tottenham Hotspur, who had trimmed their lead to two points with victory at Aston Villa on Sunday, and nudged Claudio Ranieri's men a step closer to an extraordinary title triumph. "It was not our best performance, but we showed great spirit," said Ranieri, whose side require 20 points from their final eight matches to win the title. "I feel now that I am just concentrating on the next game against Crystal Palace. We are so strong, we think only one game at a time. Step by step, that is our philosophy."

It was Newcastle's fourth consecutive defeata first this season-and saw Leicester complete a league double over the north-east giants for the first time since the 1974-75 campaign. The visitors showed more fight than in recent weeks at the King Power Stadium, but they remain in the relegation zone ahead of Benitez's St James' Park baptism of fire on Sunday against local rivals and fellow strugglers Sunderland. "I will take the positives," said Benitez. "We did well. You could see the commitment and the passion.

"There were a lot of positives and the team showed that they are convinced they can win."

Benitez made two changes to the team beaten 3-1 by Bournemouth in McClaren's final game, with Vurnon Anita and Aleksandar Mitrovic coming in, while Jack Colback moved from central midfield to left-back. Another novelty saw Moussa Sissoko line up on the left flank and the France international gave the hosts an early scare when he chased down Wes Morgan's back-pass and forced Kasper Schmeichel into a hurried clearance.

Albrighton goes close

It set the tone for an assured start by Newcastle, for whom lone striker Mitrovic proved an effective battering ram. Ayoze Perez and Colback each shot wide from decent positions, Sissoko headed the wrong side of the post from Daryl Janmaat's right-wing cross and Mitrovic played a cross-shot right across the face of goal. But Leicester stirred, Riyad Mahrez seeing a shot blocked by Steven Taylor and Robert Huth nodding the resulting corner over the bar, and midway through the first half they made the breakthrough. Mahrez's free-kick from deep on the right was only cleared as far as Marc Albrighton, loitering on the left-hand edge of the box, and his cross was nodded back by Jamie Vardy for Okazaki to score with a picturebook overhead bicycle kick.

Moments later Albrighton almost made it two, jinking this way and then the other before bending a shot a foot wide of the right-hand upright. Perez warmed Schmeichel's gloves from range at the other end, but with Leicester keeping Newcastle at arm's length, Benitez made a change early in the second half by sending on Andros Townsend for Anita. The change saw Georginio Wijnaldum drop into central midfield and Newcastle were immediately enlivened, Janmaat forcing Albrighton into an alert block and Perez sending a shot into the side-netting. Ranieri responded by introducing Jeff Schlupp for Okazaki, giving Leicester extra cover on the left against the tricky Townsend, while Albrighton switched flanks to the right and Mahrez moved inside. Newcastle goalkeeper Rob Elliot almost gifted Vardy a goal when he dropped a long throw from Christian Fuchs, only to gather it at the second attempt. But the butterflies were all in the stomachs of the home fans in the latter stages, Huth blocking from Sissoko and Newcastle substitute Siem de Jong miscuing from 15 yards, before the whistle drew a roar of relief.— AFP

INJURIES MAR MAN CITY'S HISTORY NIGHT

MANCHESTER: Injuries to centre-backs Vincent Kompany tic title challenge. The League Cup winners have fallen 12 collision with Vitaliy Buyalskiy. The Argentine attempted signs of life, Toure curling a free-kick over and Aguero and Nicolas Otamendi overshadowed proceedings as Manchester City reached the Champions League quarterfinals for the first time by drawing 0-0 with Dynamo Kiev vesterday. Leading 3-1 from last month's away leg, Manuel Pellegrini's side completed the job in forgettable fashion, with Jesus Navas's shot against the post for City the nearest either side came to breaking the deadlock. But firsthalf injuries to captain Kompany and Otamendi cast a pall over the evening at a hushed Etihad Stadium, leaving City vulnerable in defence ahead of Sunday's derby with Manchester United in the Premier League.

While progress in the Champions League represents a historic achievement for Pellegrini, who will hand over to Pep Guardiola at the season's end, the injuries could have a costly impact on City's attempt to resurrect their domespoints below leaders Leicester City, although they retain a game in hand, and face challenges from both United and in-form West Ham United for their top-four place.

Pellegrini welcomed Yaya Toure back from the heel problem that had caused him to miss Saturday's frustrating 0-0 draw at Norwich City, but within seven minutes he was counting the cost of another injury. After misjudging a bounce on the City right, Kompany slipped as he tried to recover the situation and immediately realized that he had done himself damage, passing the ball out of play and signaling to the bench before limping off with a look of disgust etched on his face. The Belgium international, who has suffered 13 calf injuries since 2008, was soon joined in the home changing room by Otamendi, who came off second-best in a to play on, before admitting defeat, leaving City with reserve centre-backs Eliaquim Mangala and Martin Demichelis in the heart of their defense. It was not a combination that will have inspired great confidence among the home support and there were early nerves as Mangala's missed kick from Demichelis's pass almost let Lukasz Teodorczyk in on goal.

With the atmosphere affected by the double injury blow, City struggled to get going and when Navas managed to pick Sergio Aguero out with a right-wing cut-back, the Argentine miscued. Visiting goalkeeper Olexandr Shovkovskiy was not tested until early in the first half, when he showed a neat touch to control the ball on his thigh after a defender had inadvertently prodded it towards his own goal. City began to show dragging a shot wide, before Navas collected a pass from Toure and drilled a low shot against the lefthand upright.

Moments later, City goalkeeper Joe Hart made his first save of the night, comfortably fielding an effort from Andriy Yarmolenko after the Ukraine winger robbed Gael Clichy. Toure continued to drive the home team forward and he threatened to make the breakthrough from Navas's cut-back, only for Shovkovskiy to save. There were two late scares in the hosts' box when first Buyalskiy and then substitute Olexandr Yakovenko took aim, but Hart blocked alertly on both occasions, giving City a clean sheet for only the second time in their 18 Champions League home games. — AFP

SPIN GAMBLE PAYS OFF AS N ZEALAND SPANK INDIA

Santner leads India's rout speed and pick three specialist spinners paid off as New Zealand humbled hosts India by 47 runs in a spin-dominated Super 10 contest of the World Twenty20 yesterday. Opting to bat first, New Zealand posted 126-7 in the Group Two contest on a prodigiously turning track at Nagpur's VCA Stadium, seemingly a below-par total against the host nation who are famed for their proficiency against spin bowling.

New Zealand's three-pronged spin attack, however, ensured it was more than enough as Mitchell Santner (4-11), Nathan McCullum (2-15) and the Indian-born Ish Sodhi (3-18) wrecked the hosts who folded for 79 in 18.1 overs. Williamson said it was not an easy decision to drop the pace duo of Tim Southee and Trent Boult to accommodate the spinners. "Obviously that was tough, they are world class bowlers," the Kiwi captain said. "But at the same time we are looking to do the best we can in these conditions. Certainly the spinners paid off today. The wicket spun a lot and they bowled very well on it."

The first three balls of the match contained the kind of drama and excitement that fans would be India's captain and expecting from the sixth edition of Mahendra Singh Dhoni the tournament in cricket's emotional and financial home in India. After Williamson won the toss and decided to set a target, Martin Guptill nonchalantly hit the first delivery from Ravichandran Ashwin over the bowler's head for a six. The off-spinner settled NAGPUR: Kane Williamson's gamble to compromise on score in the very next ball, trapping the batsman leg before with a delivery that, replay suggested, would have gone over the stumps.

New man in Colin Munro reverse hit the next ball for a six but threw his wicket in the next over. As wickets kept tumbling at the other end, Corey Anderson (34) tried to steady the innings and it was Luke Ronchi's (21 not out) 11-ball cameo that took them past the 125-mark. The Indian fans expected the chase to be a stroll in the park but Santner, who was adjudged man-of-thematch, and McCullum had other ideas. They blew away India's top order, reducing them to 26-4 in the fifth over to derail their chase.

Virat Kohli (23) resisted the onslaught for a while but Sodhi struck a crucial blow with his very first ball to send back the Indian batting mainstay. Home captain Mahendra Singh Dhoni waged a lone battle with a run-a-ball 30 but the celebrated 'finisher' could not get his team over the line. New Zealand beat India at their own game with their spinners claiming nine of the 10 wickets but Dhoni insisted the defeat was more down to his team's careless batting. "It was our batting batsman that let us down," the home captain said after India's fifth futile attempt to beat New Zealand in Twenty20 Internationals. "There were quite a few soft dismissals. It was not like the deliveries got a lot of batsmen out. Maybe it was our shot selection... there was no partnership also," Dhoni rued. — Reuters

WEAK RETAIL SALES HIGHLIGHT RISKS TO US ECONOMY January retail sales drop 0.4%, producer prices fall 0.2% in Feb

WASHINGTON: US retail sales fell less than expected in 0.2 percent and core retail sales rising 0.2 percent in February. February, but a sharp downward revision to January's sales could reignite concerns about the economy's growth prospects. Yesterday's weak report from the Commerce Department bucked the trend of recent labor market data that had suggested the economy remained on solid ground despite some concerns that a recession was looming. "The economy's engines are not going into reverse ... but at the moment, it is hard to see GDP with a 2 percent handle," said Chris Rupkey, chief economist at MUFG Union Bank in New York. Retail sales dipped 0.1 percent last month as automobile purchases fell and cheaper gasoline undercut receipts at service stations. January's retail sales were revised down to show a 0.4 percent decline instead of the previously reported 0.2 percent increase. Retail sales excluding automobiles, gasoline, building materials and food services were unchanged after a downwardly revised 0.2 percent increase in January. These socalled core retail sales correspond most closely with the consumer spending component of gross domestic product and were previously reported to have risen 0.6 percent in January. Economists polled by Reuters had forecast retail sales slipping

Prices for US government debt rose after the data, while US stocks were trading lower. The dollar was largely unchanged against a basket of currencies. Last month's weak core retail sales reading, together with January's modest gain, suggest that consumer spending will probably remain tepid in the first quarter after growing at a 2.0 percent annualized rate in the fourth quarter.

gather for a two-day policy meeting. The US central bank is expected to leave interest rates unchanged as policymakers monitor developments on global financial markets, domestic inflation and the labor market. The Fed hiked its benchmark overnight interest rate in December for the first time in nearly a decade.

"Market turbulence will keep the Fed from hiking in the near-term while a softer economy will keep the Fed from going later this year. This (retail sales) report suggests that the softer economy may be coming sooner than we thought," said Bricklin Dwyer, an economist at BNP Paribas in New York.

ed deflation is starting to wane. That could curb further declines in producer prices. But oil prices, which tumbled by as much as 4 percent on Monday on concerns that a six-week market recovery has gone beyond the fundamentals, remain a wild card. So far this year, the dollar has gained about 0.9 percent on a trade-weighted basis.

A 4.4 percent drop in the value of sales at service stations weighed on retail sales last month. Gasoline prices dropped 9

Economists at Barclays slashed their first-quarter GDP growth estimate by five-tenths of a percentage point to a 1.9 percent rate after the data. The economy grew at a 1 percent pace in the fourth guarter. Economic growth prospects were also dented by another report from the Commerce Department showing business inventories edging up 0.1 percent in January as sales continued to decline. That pushed the inventory-to-sales ratio to its highest level since May 2009, suggesting inventories could remain a drag on growth in the nearterm.

FED ON HOLD

The reports came as Federal Reserve officials prepared to

In a separate report, the Labor Department said its producer price index dropped 0.2 percent last month on lower energy and food costs, after edging up 0.1 percent in January.

In the 12 months through February, the PPI was unchanged after falling 0.2 percent in the year through January. It was the first time since January 2015 that the yearon-vear PPI did not decline.

Receipts at electronics and appliance stores slipped 0.1 percent. But there were pockets of strength, with clothing store sales rising 0.9 percent last month and receipts at building materials and garden equipment stores gaining 1.6 percent.

Sales at sporting goods and hobby stores rose 1.2 percent and sales at restaurants and bars increased 1.0 percent. Online store sales dropped 0.2 percent. — Reuters

HOW EGYPT IS STRUGGLING TO END CORRUPTION IN WHEAT

CAIRO: When Egyptian lawyer Ahmed Gad stepped out of a cafe on the outskirts of Cairo to take a call last October, a gunman on the back of a motorcycle trained a semi-automatic rifle on him and opened fire. Three bullets ripped into Gad's right side before his attackers sped off. Gad, who survived, said the men were trying to silence him for his attempts to expose corruption in one of Egypt's most important commodity markets: wheat.

Wheat can be a matter of life and death in Egypt. The country is the world's biggest importer of the grain, in large part because Cairo runs a bread subsidy program that feeds tens of millions of poor Egyptians. Wheat shortages have triggered riots in the past, and when Egyptians rose up against autocrat Hosni Mubarak in 2011 one of their signature chants was "Bread, freedom and social justice."

The pressures have returned over the past few months as Egypt has faced potential wheat shortages because of its strict ban on imports of wheat infected with ergot, a common fungus.

The hardest blight to eradicate, though, has been corruption. President Abdel Fattah Al-Sisi has made ending corruption - including graft in the wheat industry - one of his government's priorities. In 2014, his government rolled out a system of smart cards designed to stop unscrupulous bakeries selling government-subsidised flour on the black market. Cairo says the system has been a big success, saving millions of dollars in bread subsidies, reducing imports, and ending shortages that once prompted long queues outside bakeries across the country. Supplies Minister Khaled Hanafi told Egyptian reporters in late 2014 that roughly 50 percent of the country's flour supply was stolen. In December last year he told Reuters that the new system had saved more than 6 billion Egyptian pounds ($766 million) worth of flour.

But industry officials, traders and bakers say those reforms have failed - and even made abuse of the system worse. Eight sources in the wheat industry said the smart card system could be hacked, allowing some bakers to falsify receipts and request far more subsidised flour than they officially sold. Instead of reducing the amount of flour the state paid for, the critics said, the smart card system actually increased it. That triggered a wave of fraud higher up the supply chain that the sources say cost the country hundreds of millions of dollars last year. Internal statistics produced by the Supplies Ministry and reviewed by Reuters suggest the problems with the smart card system were considerable. The data show that consumption of state-subsidised flour rose in early 2015 in 12 of the 19 provinces where the smart card system had been introduced. In February 2015, consumption of subsidized flour was 955,000 tons, the data show, up from 750,000 tons the previous February. The government concedes there were teething problems in the smart card system that temporarily drove up consumption. But it said the problem was limited and was dealt with.

Whatever the case, the extra consumption early last year drained government grain reserves. By last May, ministry data show, wheat reserves had fallen to just 435,000 tons, enough for about two weeks' supply and far below the stock of three to four months normally held by the state. Four traders said that the government tried to paper over the shortage by declaring a bumper domestic harvest last year and then quietly filling the gap by buying extra imported wheat. In fact, the traders and one former adviser to the Supplies Minister said, the harvest was no bigger than normal. It was not possible to verify the size of the harvest. Nader Nour El-Din, a former adviser to the supplies minister and now a professor of agriculture at Cairo University, said it was inconceivable for the harvest to have been as big as the government said because the area under wheat had not increased in size, production methods had not changed and fertilizer use had not increased.

The Egyptian government denied that it faced a wheat shortage. In his December interview with Reuters, Supplies Minister Hanafi said that wheat levels were deliberately reduced in the first five months of 2015 to clear space in silos for the bumper crop the state was expecting. "We never, (and) we are not facing at all, a shortage in the reserves," he told Reuters. "The opposite is true."

SMART SYSTEM HACKED

The smart card system was designed to end corruption. The scheme provides each family with a plastic card allowing them to buy five small flat loaves of bread per family member a day. A family member must swipe their card through a machine every time they visit a bakery - so the Ministry of Supplies can track exactly how much bread each bakery sells. The government then pays each bakery a subsidy per loaf. Until the smart card system, the ministry relied on bakeries to report how much bread they sold. But many bakeries overstated the amount and then sold the extra on the black market. The government has said the new system stopped that over-reporting.

But four bakers, three wheat traders and a miller told Reuters that the system was possible to cheat. The smart cards and the machine that reads them were produced by SMART, a private company based in Cairo. According to the traders and bakers, employees at SMART secretly produced cards that resemble the ordinary smart card but act as a "master" that overrides the system. By swiping a master card through their machine, bakers were able to reset the system and then swipe ordinary smart cards multiple times. SMART employees sold the cheat devices to bakeries for several thousand dollars, according to rival bakers. One grocer in the industrial suburb of Helwan, outside Cairo, described how merchants in his neighborhood cheated the system: "The card is entered into the machine and the ration spent but the device can then reset the card allowing more spending. So instead of spending once or twice a month you can spend 1,000 times," said the grocer. —Reuters

COMMODITY AND CURRENCY SLUMP EXPOSE FRAILTIES OF AFRICAN ECONOMIES

JOHANNESBURG: Slumping commodity prices have taken African currencies down with them, exposing the fundamental economic frailties of the world's poorest continent by driving up inflation in countries that import most of their manufactured goods. Regional economies are in no position to use their weakening currencies to their trade advantage because they have few exports beyond their natural resources. The hardship for households has been compounded by rising prices for food - one commodity that has defied the price fall due to drought in southern Africa

The economic problems are growing in countries from South Africa, a major producer of minerals and precious metals, to nascent natural gas producer Mozambique and Nigeria, the continent's top exporter of crude oil. They highlight the need for African economies to diversify and adopt strategies for industrialisation to reduce their reliance on imports, say economists. But they acknowledge this will be difficult in the current environment as investment is hindered by rising inflation and interest rates, as well as the power shortages that plague many areas.

"For commodities producers the situation is very clear and very negative," said Francois Conradie, head of research at NKC African Economics. Inflation, which many African economies had contained in recent years, is picking up pace as currencies crumble, driving up the prices of the goods they don't produce and so need to import - the vast majority of manufactured products. Even where central banks have introduced additional measures in an attempt to maintain stability, such as in Africa's biggest economy Nigeria, which has introduced capital controls, inflation is picking up. "In Nigeria's case, a lot of importers cannot get dollars from official channels, so they get their dollars at the black-market rate which can be almost double the official rate. Their sales price reflects that," said Conradie.

INFLATION ACCELERATES

Inflation in Nigeria, which fell from close to 14 percent in 2010 to below 8 percent in 2014, has been gathering pace and hit 9.6 percent in January. Even South Africa, the continent's most industrialised economy which saw its rand currency lose over 30 percent in 2015, has failed to translate currency weakness into an export boon.

A fall in the value of its exports pushed its current account deficit to 5.1 percent of gross domestic product in the fourth quarter of 2015, from 4.3 percent in the third. In Mozambique - which has vast natural gas deposits - inflation was 12.18 percent in January, the third straight month of double-digit price increases, fuelled by a 30 percent depreciation in its metical currency the past 12 months.

Angola, Africa's third-largest economy and second-biggest crude producer, is almost completely dependent on oil, which accounts for over 90 percent of foreign exchange revenues.

It saw inflation rise to 17.34 percent in January from 14.27 percent in December. Its kwanza currency fell more than 30 percent last year. President Jose Eduardo dos Santos last week urged "entrepreneurs" to lift domestic production of goods and food.

But it may be a case of too little, too late in a country where analysts say there has been no serious attempt at industrialisation, with billions of dollars squandered on "industrial parks" where almost nothing is produced.

FOOD PRICES RISE

During the commodities boom - fuelled by top consumer China's rapid growth and industrialisation the value of Africa's exports soared to $420 billion from $100 billion between 2000 and 2011, according to World Bank data. Virtually all of those exports were commodities; the value of Africa's manufactured goods in that period rose only to $33 billion from $13 billion.

The commodities boom financed an African consumption binge on imported goods - domestic demand accounted for two-thirds of African growth in that period - that the continent can now ill afford as commodity revenues and currencies sink.—Reuters

Kuwait oil price drops to $32.74 pb

KUWAIT: Kuwait oil price dropped 83 cents to $32.74 per barrel on Monday compared to $33.29 pb in Friday's trades, Kuwait Petroleum Corporation (KPC) said yesterday. Oil prices on the international markets fell by three percent on Monday against backdrop of American reserves' rise and Iran's negligence of major producers' freezing of output at January's level. Meanwhile, the Brent Blend declined upon settlement by 86 cents reaching 39.53 pb. American crude oil also decreased by $1.32 settling at $37.18 pb.

Dubai airport's January passenger traffic up 6.3%

DUBAI: Passenger traffic through Dubai International Airport, the world's busiest airport for international business, rose 6.3 percent from a year earlier to a record 7.33 million people in January, the airport's operator said yesterday. The airport opened a new concourse last month, projecting this would help boost traffic to 85 million passengers in 2016, up from 78 million last year. Dubai International handled 201,483 tons of cargo in January, up 8.2 percent from a year earlier. Only part of Dubai's cargo traffic goes through Dubai International; another facility, Dubai World Central, handles pure cargo operations.

Iraq bought 30,000 tons of rice in tender from Argentina

HAMBURG: Iraq's state grains buyer purchased 30,000 tons of rice to be sourced from Argentina in a tender this week, European traders said yesterday. The price was $468 a ton c&f free out, they said. Argentine rice had been offered lowest in the tender, which closed on March 8 with offers having to remain valid until Monday, March 14. The tender had sought a nominal 30,000 tons sourced optionally only from United States, Uruguay or Argentina for March/April shipment. "I think a new tender will be issued soon as I believe Iraq has a requirement at least for a further 90,000 tons of rice after their low level of recent purchases," one European trader said.

Egypt CB to hold pound steady at 8.85 per dollar

CAIRO: Egypt's central bank will hold the pound steady at 8.85 pounds per dollar at an exceptional foreign currency auction yesterday, three banking sources told Reuters, a day after the bank devalued the currency. Egypt, which relies heavily on imports, has been facing an acute foreign currency shortage since a 2011 uprising drove away tourists and foreign investors - two major sources of hard currency. Its reserves have tumbled to $16.6 billion as of February from $36 billion in 2011. The central bank said earlier yesterday it would sell $200 million at an exceptional auction to finance the import of essential goods. The pound had been under heavy pressure in recent weeks, weakening to almost 10 to the dollar on the black market as foreign currency liquidity dried up in the banking sector. The central bank has taken various steps this month to divert liquidity back into banks. Central Bank Governor Tarek Amer, who took over in November, had taken several steps to restore confidence in the pound and make it more attractive to investors before devaluing it and adopting a more flexible approach.

GCC NEEDS $151BN WORTH OF FINANCING NEEDS: MARKAZ

Bonds expected to cover 38% of needs: Raghu

KUWAIT: Kuwait Financial Centre "Markaz" recently held a presentation on "Forecasting Sovereign Debt Issuances in GCC" in collaboration with Kuwait Banking Association (KBA). The presentation was delivered by M R Raghu, Head of Research at Markaz and Managing Director of Marmore MENA Intelligence, a research subsidiary of Markaz providing services of financial research and analysis of MENA economies, markets, and companies in the MENA region.

On an overall basis for 2016, Raghu stated that the financing need for GCC countries to be at $151.3bn of which $78.1bn is expected to come from reserves (52 percent), $57.7bn from domestic & international bond issuances (38 percent) and the rest through loans (10 percent). Overall, GCC governments are expected to raise between $385-390bn cumulatively through 2020 through local and international bonds.

Raghu said that the low oil prices has altered the fiscal landscape of GCC countries as the prized fiscal surplus registered in erstwhile years has flipped into large scale deficits to the tune of $160bn in 2015 and 2016 respectively. In 2015, the deficit was partly met by domestic bond issuances and the remaining by liquidating reserves held in Sovereign Wealth Funds (SWFs). Saudi Arabia for the first time in 8 years issued local debt to raise approx. $26bn from domestic banks and utilized almost $100bn of its reserves. Raghu outlined that the impact of lower oil revenues has visibly impacted the Kuwaiti banks' deposit mobilization process, as government deposits account for sizeable portion. Fall in deposits growth coupled with governments drawing down on their savings and placement of domestic bonds by the governments with the local banks has usurped liquidity in the regional financial system causing interbank rates to rise. Though, the banks are well capitalized, they may not be able to act as the sole source of funding avenue for the governments. Rising debt levels for the GCC governments and uncertain outlook regarding oil prices, which determines the debt servicing capabilities, has led to higher cost of insurance for insuring government debt as evidenced by the widening spreads for Credit Default Swaps (CDS). While UAE, Kuwait Saudi Arabia and Qatar boast of robust fiscal reserves, Bahrain and Oman have minimal reserves by comparision. The sovereign ratings of Bahrain, Oman and Saudi Arabia have been downgraded in the recent weeks. Further, lack of clarity regarding debt management policies of few GCC countries has caused wide spread speculation regarding the way the deficit could be financed. This uncertainty has resulted in fixed income investors demanding wider spreads for outstanding issues in GCC region. To forecast the sovereign debt issuance we have assumed assumptions regarding the way the deficit would be financed either by drawing down on the reserves or through raising debt. While Qatar and Oman have clearly provided indications regarding their approach to plug the deficit, Saudi Arabia and Bahrain budgetary documents fall short of such discussion.

Apart from forecasting debt issuance through budgetary estimates, debt issuance till 2020 is estimated through IMF projections of fiscal deficit. Due to lack of clarity on the debt levels that would be taken up by the GCC government, based on historical data and our analysis we expect 40 percent to 60 percent of deficits in the years 2017 to 2020 to be financed by new debt issuance.

Based on our analysis, the new debt issuances by the GCC government could usher in a new era for GCC fixed income markets. The challenging environment posed by lower oil prices should be converted into an opportunity to develop the domestic debt markets.

In this regard, establishment of debt management office and regulatory framework to clearly communicate to the markets is necessary. Though domestic debt issuance allows for easier and faster way to raise capital at lower credit spreads, it could usurp liquidity and 'crowd out' borrowing space for private borrowers. On the other hand, jumbo issuances are possible in international issuances while it increases the vulnerability due to increased exposure to foreign debt.

Having said that, we feel that the GCC fixed income offers higher risk-return attributes than the developing and emerging markets. Lower correlation with other asset classes including equities argues favorably for their inclusion in an investor portfolio. The fact that all the currencies are pegged provides comfort to the investor as it helps avoid currency risk. However, geopolitical risks and uncertainty regarding oil price could affect the bond performance.

DOHA: The chief executive of Doha Bank said yesterday his bank would not bid in a Treasury bill auction which the central bank might hold next month because higher yields were available.

"As far as I'm concerned, I'm not opting for it at this point," R. Seetharaman told reporters on the sidelines of a financial conference. "Unless I have additional liquidity, why should I bid? I have better yields than others. Banks who have excess liquidity can pocket these kind of instruments. As far as I'm concerned, I'm not opting for it at this point." The central bank has cancelled its monthly T-bill auction in the last several months because banks were demanding high yields; liquidity in the banking system has tightened since mid-2015 as lower oil and gas prices have cut flows of new money into the economy.

The three-month Qatar interbank offered rate jumped to 1.46 percent in mid-February from 1.13 percent at the end of last June, though it has since fallen back slightly from its high. —Reuters

OIL PRICES EDGE LOWER OVER UNCERTAIN SUPPLY PICTURE

LONDON: Oil prices fell for a second day yesterday, as concerns emerged that a six-week rally may have fizzled after OPEC doused hopes for a speedy erosion of a global overhang of unwanted crude.

The Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries said on Monday demand for its crude would be less than previously thought in 2016 as supply from rivals proves more resilient to low prices, increasing excess supply in the market. To tackle the surplus, Saudi Arabia and non-OPEC member Russia, the world's two largest oil exporters, along with Qatar and Venezuela have proposed major producers freeze output at January levels. Even with the proposed freeze, d continuously high production means global output still exceeds demand by at least 1 million barrels per day (bpd). "We ran into $40 a barrel ... the idea OPEC was going to be able to at least freeze production and was along the right tracks has unravelled a bit," CMC Markets strategist Jasper Lawler said.

Brent crude futures were down 92 cents at $38.61 a barrel by 1210 GMT, while US crude futures were 83 cents lower at $36.35. While Russian and Saudi production remains stable, analysts say Iran has trebled its output to around 3.1 million bpd, from close to 1 million bpd in January.

Oil demand could also slow. Morgan Stanley said there was a 30 percent probability of a global recession this year. In spite of uncertainty about whether a production freeze will occur, and over its effectiveness given concerns about the global economy, investors have turned more friendly towards oil. Speculators have added to their bets on a sustained rise in crude futures and the ratio of bullish bets to bearish in the Brent market has risen to its highest since last May, consultancy JBC Energy said.

"I'd be very surprised if we just tanked down here and made fresh lows below $27 and the impression I get is I'm not the only one. Futures sentiment ... and futures positioning has switched around and is looking a lot more bullish," CMC's Lawler said. — Reuters

IMF HEAD PRESSES LAOS TO DEEPEN REFORMS

BANGKOK: Communist-ruled Laos must visit, the head of the International deepen reforms to maintain its rapid expansion, the IMF chief said yesterday at the end of a rare visit to one of the world's fastest growing economies.

Resource-rich Laos has an annual growth rate of around 7.4 percent, but gains have not been evenly distributed and poverty remains widespread among its 6.8 million people, the majority of whom work in agriculture. Much of the boom has been driven by huge foreign investment since Communist authorities began a very slight opening up of the economy.

China in particular has led that investment, capitalising on the landlocked country's mineral, forestry and water resources. In a statement issued after her

Monetary Fund Christine Lagarde stressed the need to focus on sustainable growth and bolster the country's fragile economy against shifts in the global market.

"Economic prospects for Lao PDR remain favourable," she said, referring to the People's Democratic Republic. "However, to safeguard macroeconomic stability during the transition out of lowincome country status in the mediumterm, it will be important to strengthen the economy's resilience to external shocks and put in place the conditions for sustainable growth."

Lagarde said key reforms should involve investing in education and raising living standards, crafting a more efficient public administration, accumulating international reserves and developing the financial system. The IMF head also urged the country's notoriously opaque leaders to put out "better quality and timely statistics".

Laos is tightly-controlled by its Communist leaders, who have barred a free press, clamped down on dissent and rarely disclose how their policies are crafted or implemented. Corruption is also widespread. The country has approached free trade and other liberal reforms much more cautiously than neighbouring Vietnam, a fellow Communist state that is far wealthier.

Many economists say recent growth in Laos has had much less of an impact on poverty reduction than in neighboring Cambodia and Vietnam. — AFP

CHINA CONSIDERS TAX ON CURRENCY TRADES: REPORT

LATEST VOLLEY AGAINST THOSE BETTING ON YUAN DEPRECIATION

BEIJING: China's central bank has drafted plans to impose a tax on currency trades, Bloomberg News reported vesterday, in what would be its latest volley against those betting on a depreciation of the yuan.

Chinese authorities have spent unprecedented sums to support the currency and stem capital flight since a surprise devaluation rattled investors last summer. The tax would be the most dramatic measure to date, although Bloomberg reported that the rules had yet to be approved and the level might initially be kept at zero as an experiment.

Dubbed a "Tobin tax" after Nobel economics prizewinner James Tobin, it would impose a small levy on foreign-exchange transactions. The aim would be to deter investors from seeking to profit on fluctuations in the currency. Analysts said the move would reduce liquidity in the long term and possibly fuel short-term volatility as investors were forced to leave the market.

If implemented, the tax could also raise guestions about plans for the yuan to join the International Monetary Fund's elite reserve currency basket, scheduled for October. "RMB as reserve currency RIP," George Magnus, associate at the University of Oxford China Centre, wrote on Twitter. "Not that it was likely anyway." "Tobin taxes" have been fiercely debated since they were first proposed, with Sweden adopting a financial transaction tax in the 1980s to boost government revenue, and then abolishing it after bond trading volumes collapsed.

Major banking hubs such as Britain and the US have previously opposed them for the damage they would cause the financial sector. The idea of a Chinese Tobin tax was floated last year by the deputy chief of the central People's Bank of China in an article for China Finance magazine, in which he said it would help "contain the inflows and outflows of short-term speculative and arbitrage funds".

Chris Weston, chief market strategist at IG, said there was speculation that the central bank "is taking the fight to the speculative FX community", but that the Tobin tax would "not be taken kindly by the IMF" if adopted. "If Chinese officials broaden this to other markets, like swaps, then speculators may pile into proxy currencies" such as the Hong Kong dollar, he added. China's foreign-exchange reserves dropped to $3.20 trillion at the end of February, the People's Bank of China reported last week-down more than $300 billion in just four months. — AFP

Sri Lanka's ECONOMY SLOWS AS TEA PARTY ENDS

COLOMBO: Sri Lanka's economic growth slowed slightly to 4.8 percent last year due to a fall in exports of its main commodity, tea, official figures showed yesterday. The figure marked only a marginal decline on 2014, but will add to concerns after international lenders and ratings agencies warned the country is heading for a debt crisis. Tea production dropped 2.6 percent during 2015 to about $545 million, the Department of Census and Statistics said in a statement, while exports fell by nearly seven percent to 306 million kg (673 million pounds).

The declines were offset by services, which grew 56.6 percent, and industrial output, which expanded by 26.2 percent. Last week the government announced a series of emergency tax increases to combat a debt crisis that has forced it to seek a bailout from the International Monetary Fund. Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe has put on hold for one year plans to lower corporate taxes, and has revived a capital gains tax abolished in 1987. The moves are aimed at repairing the economy, battered by mounting debt repayments that led ratings agency Fitch to downgrade Sri Lanka's credit rating last month. In a special statement to parliament, Wickremesinghe blamed the previous government for allowing debt to spiral, saying his ministers had uncovered $7 billion in loans unaccounted for in the national budget. However, the current administration embarked on a spending spree after taking power in January 2015 to deliver on election promises of higher wages and lower prices, increasing the deficit and sparking concern over the balance of payments.

of clients in the brand and to maintain its leading position in the local and regional automotive market. It's also keen to systematically keep in contact with them, which is best expressed in the after sales service, especially that Nissan Al Babtain, which is one of best known companies in Kuwait and the region, believes that its role is not limited to car sales only thus it goes beyond it as part of its goal of providing all kinds of comfort for its clients.

No doubts that the 'March Campaign' will prove the fact that the promotions of Nissan Al Babtain always gained the satisfaction and trust of the clients due to its credibility and its fitting to the needs of consumers in Kuwait and the GCC countries according to certified studies and surveys.

AUSTRALIA MULLS TAX INCENTIVES TO ENCOURAGE STARTUP INVESTMENT

SYDNEY: Australia's Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull said yesterday his government will this week introduce legislation to stimulate greater investment in startups - as Australia looks to transition its economy away from a slowing mining sector.

Australia has proposed amended tax laws that would allow retail investors a 20 percent income tax rebate, capped at $200,000 per year on any startup investments, while a 10 percent tax rebate for venture capital investors in established start-ups wishing to expand will also be permitted.

Turnbull said the legislation will be introduced as early as Wednesday. The new tax laws are a key element of Australia's plan to encourage greater risk-taking to ease the pain of a economic transition amid an end to the investment phase of a lucrative mining boom that sustained its economy for more than a decade. "We have been from an economy that was fired up by the mining construction boom... but inevitably it was going to tail off so what comes next? What comes next is innovation," Turnbull told reporters in Canberra. —Reuters

TANZANIA'S FEMALE ENGINEERS STRIVE TO BREAK MALE DOMINANCE

DAR ES SALAAM: Shouting above the din of a concrete mixer, 25-year-old civil engineer Angela James says she is unfazed about being the only woman technician working at a busy construction site in the Tanzanian capital. "I am a trained civil engineer, so you should expect to see me working in the field," she said. "It doesn't matter who I'm working with, as long as my job is done perfectly."

The graduate engineer from the University of Dar es Salaam has over the past two years been gaining practical experience as she works towards her final professional qualification.

"Some people don't believe that a woman can work in this field, but I have proved them wrong," she said. Dressed in a shiny yellow safety jacket and a hard hat, James mingles with the casual labourers while giving instructions on the construction of the wedge-shaped, five-storey building that will house offices and apartments in the Dar es Salaam suburb. "I have to ensure that all the technical standards are met. There's no margin of error," she told the Thomson Reuters Foundation. James is one of almost 300 female trainees participating in the women-only Structured Engineers Apprenticeship Program (SEAP) which aims to equip them with knowledge and experience to become professional engineers in a male dominated field.

Although the first female engineers in Tanzania graduated in 1976, official statistics show that by 2009 only four percent of all registered engineers in the east African country were women. But under the SEAP program, implemented by the Engineering Registration Board, Tanzania's professional body, with funding from the Norwegian government, the number of female engineers in Tanzania has more than doubled since 2010, said ERB officials.

INSPIRATION

Few girls complete secondary education in Tanzania due to widespread poverty and the perception among parents that girls should carry out domestic duties. If they are in school, girls have received little encouragement to pursue mathematics and science subjects, often considered the domain of male students.

According to Zuhura Said of Temesa - the government agency dealing with electrical, engineering and mechanical services - more women engineers would inspire young girls to study mathematics and sciences and take up the profession themselves. "Female trainees will become mentors for young engineers and some of them will take leadership positions," she said.

Over five years, the Norwegian government has provided 13.9 million Norwegian crowns ($1.65 million) in funds to support trainee female engineers, mostly in the form of a monthly living allowance and training for mentors. "This programme ... aims to bring gender balance in professional training and to empower women engineers to manage their responsibilities," said Monica Blaalid, a consultant at the Norwegian Embassy in Dar es Salaam. Benedict Mukama, ERB's Assistant Registrar, said the programme had enrolled 291 women, of whom 143 have already been registered as professional engineers. The trainees who have received Norwegian funding had a completion rate of 86 percent, compared to 20 percent for the candidates who had to pay their own way, ERB data shows. -Reuters

AVON TO CUT 2,500 JOBS, MOVE HQ TO BRITAIN

NEW YORK: Struggling cosmetics company Avon Products, Inc said yesterday it was eliminating 2,500 jobs and moving its headquarters to Great Britain, its latest restructuring after selling off its North American business.

The changes were expected to cost $60 million before taxes in mostly employee-related charges in the first quarter of 2016, but headcount reduction will result in $30 million in savings this year, the company said in a statement. Savings were expected to reach up to $70 million in 2017. Avon has "significant commercial operations" in Great Britain and the move would happen "over time," the statement said, without giving a specific timeline. "With the recent completion of the sale of the North American business, our commercial operations are now fully outside of the United States, allowing us to dramatically rethink our operating model," Avon CEO Sheri McCoy said in the statement.

The company will maintain two facilities in New York state, continue to be incorporated in New York and trade on the New York Stock Exchange. Shares of Avon (AVP) were up two percent in after-market trading. As of late last year, Avon employed 28,300 people outside of North America. In December, hedge fund Cerberus Capital Management bought a 16.6 percent stake in Avon and 80.1 percent of its North American business, in a deal worth $605 million

Avon products are sold door-to-door through 6 million independent representatives in about 70 countries. The company has struggled amid competition from online and traditional retailers, as well as niche brands. Avon's departure comes as other corporations leave the US for more tax-friendly bases, a trend dubbed "tax inversion" that President Barack Obama has condemned as "unpatriotic." — AFP

EUROPE SHARES TRACK ASIA LOWER AFTER BOJ VIEW

LONDON: European shares fell yesterday, mirroring declines in Asia after the Bank of Japan painted a bleaker picture of the Japanese economy and helped push the yen higher, and as oil prices dropped again. The BOJ left policy on hold, as expected. Investors' attention now turns to a two-day meeting of the US Federal Reserve's rate-setters, who are likely to signal a slower pace of interest rate hikes than forecast after they raised the cost of borrowing in December for the first time in nearly a decade.

The BOJ, like the European Central Bank, has resorted to negative rates in an effort to spur growth and inflation. The Fed signalled in its 'dot plot' charts of the possible path of interest rates after its December hike that it could raise rates four more times this year. Economists say this could be reduced to three or even two.

Recent data has suggested the US economy is growing stronger, however, with fears of a return to recession much diminished compared with earlier this year. 'The Fed meeting is important because ... there is a risk of a hawkish statement,' RIA Capital Markets bond strategist Nick Stamenkovic said. 'Investors will wait for the statement and the dot plots before taking new positions.' The pan-European FTSEurofirst 300 stocks index fell 0.9 percent, led lower by commodity-related stocks. The STOXX Europe 600 Basic Resources index was down 4.3 percent.

'There is still a soft demand coupled with excess supply story in the commodities spectrum,' said Lorne Baring, managing director at B Capital Wealth Management.

Asian stocks fall

Asian stocks retreated yesterday, with energy companies sliding after a drop in oil prices, and as investors awaited a decision from the Bank of Japan for clues to central bank thinking around the world. Economists do not expect the BOJ to announce any major new moves, after it shocked markets by introducing negative interest rates at its last gathering in January.

That was seen as a desperate attempt to prop up Japan's faltering economic growth plans, highlighting concerns that central banks are running out of ammunition to boost up the sagging world economy. Last week the European Central Bank slashed already record low interest rates, pledged to pump more money into the banking system and, for the first time, said it would start buying corporate bonds. Investors also see the BOJ as a prelude to a US Federal Reserve meeting, starting Tuesday, which will be closely watched for clues to whether the world's most powerful central bank will raise interest rates any time soon.

"Before the US central bank takes centre stage, the Bank of Japan provides the proverbial warm up act," Tony Farnham, a Sydney-based strategist at Paterson's Securities, told Bloomberg News.

"No changes are expected by the BOJ at this meeting, but further stimulus initiatives in April are not beyond the realms of possibility." Japanese stocks edged down as traders awaited news from the BOJ's twoday policy meeting, due this afternoon, while Shanghai and Hong Kong also fell.

Chinese shares lost ground in early deals, as investors took profits from a rally in the previous session driven by a pledge from the regulator it would keep stabilising volatile equities.

Energy stocks tumble

Sydney also dropped more than one percent, hit by a slump in energy companies after oil prices slid, and as traders digested the minutes from a Reserve Bank of Australia meeting. Energy shares across Asia took a battering after US crude prices tumbled more than three percent in the previous session, as hopes faded that major producers would stop pumping in a bid to dampen a glut of global supplies.

A slight uptick in oil prices yesterday-the US benchmark added eight cents to $37.26 and the global measure, Brent, climbed five cents to $39.58 — was not enough to support energy companies.

Australia's Sundance Energy collapsed almost 17 percent, while CNOOC lost 1.43 percent and Sinopec dropped 1.23 percent in Hong Kong. Russia on Monday said a meeting to discuss an output freeze had been pushed back to next month, while news Iran will not temper its production until it reaches four million barrels per day (bpd) weighed on crude.

The Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) estimated Iran pumped out 3.1 million bpd of crude in February, up from 2.9 million in January. Evan Lucas, a market strategist at IG Markets in Sydney, predicted oil prices will average around $35 a barrel in the secondquarter, after briefly climbing above $40 for the first time this year.

"The rebalance appears to be partly based on the view that Chinese demand and OPEC freezes will rebalance the supply/demand equation," he said. "However, that is clearly not the case and market saturation is more likely capping the price in the short-term."

KEEPING SCORE: The Shanghai Composite Index lost 1.1 percent to 2,828.31 points and Hong Kong's Hang Seng shed 0.6 percent to 20,309.65.

Tokyo's Nikkei 225 slipped 0.7 percent to 17,110.31 and Sydney's S&P ASX 200 fell 1.4 percent to 5,111.40. Seoul's Kospi was off 0.2 percent at 1,968.75 and India's Sensex retreated 0.6 percent to 24,647.93. Taiwan and Singapore also declined while New Zealand gained. — Agencies

The winning four - the new-generation Audi A4 Benchmarking synthesis of technology and esthetics • Best drag coefficient in its class

KUWAIT: The new-generation Audi A4 is a fascinating synthesis of technology and esthetics. All the technology in the brand's bestselling family has been redeveloped so that it yet again defines the benchmark in the segment. During the development work, high priority was placed on the reduction of CO2 emissions. All technologies were focused on reducing drive resistance. The new Audi A4 has just arrived in Kuwait at Fouad Alghanim & Sons Automotive Company showroom, the exclusive dealer of Audi in Kuwait.

A good example is aerodynamics: The A4 Sedan has the best drag coefficient in its class at 0.23. The new models also have impressively low CO2 emissions. The most powerful engine for the Middle East will be a four-cylinder unit with 252 hp, S-tronic and quattro wheel drive. Driver assistance systems and infotainment are of luxury quality. A new generation of four-cylinder TFSI engines with newly developed combustion methods sets benchmarks in terms of fuel consumption, emissions and performance for four-cylinder gasoline engines. Expected arrival date for the the A4 Sedan in the region is first quarter of 2016. Three different TFSI models will be on offer: 35 TFSI with 150 hp (1.4 engine), 40 TFSI with 190 hp (2.0 engine) and the top of the range engine 45 TFSI with 252 hp (2.0 engine).

At 4.73 meters long and with a wheelbase of 2.82 meters - the new Audi A4 has a confident stance on the road. A prominent horizontal line on the front and rear emphasizes the car's width. The flowing design with concise lines communicates the sporty elegance of the brand. The Singleframe grille is wide and low; the optionally available headlights in LED and Matrix LED technology (including dynamic turn indicators) make technology a visual enjoy generous space; the smooth lines emphasize the width of the interior. The front of the dashboard features a broad band of air outlets and a large decorative surface. At night, optional discreet contour lighting illuminates the doors and the central console. The quality of workmanship is uncompromisingly high. Colors and materials follow a new line concept allowing customers even more freedom during configuration.

Information and fascination: the Audi virtual cockpit and MMI

The new model offers an abundance of intelligent technologies, the use of which is even more intuitive with the new Audi MMI display and control concept. Technological highlights of the new A4 include the Audi virtual cockpit, the Audi Matrix LED headlights, the Audi smartphone interface, the Bang & Olufsen Sound System with 3D sound, the Audi phone box with wireless charging, the head-up display and new driver assistance systems like the parking assist, rear cross-traffic assist, exit warning, collision avoid-ance assist, turn assist and the Audi presense systems.

The focus here is on two innovations. The optional Audi virtual cockpit, a fully digital combination instrument, features a 12.3-inch LCD screen that displays the most important information in brilliant high-resolution graphics, with great detail and sophisticated effects.

The MMI control concept in the center console is also a newly designed feature and acts as the main control element. The top-end infotainment system, MMI Navigation plus with MMI touch and a large 8.3-inch monitor, has a touchpad in the rotary controller to zoom in and out and to enter characters. The entire MMI

ly. The Audi smartphone interface is a new feature. It integrates iOS and Android mobile phones into an environment developed especially for this purpose -Audi MMI. The Audi phone box connects smartphones to the on-board antenna and charges them inductively according to the Qi standard. For discerning hi-fi fans, the Bang & Olufsen Sound System with innovative 3D sound is available, which introduces the additional dimension of height. The new Audi tablet can also be used as flexible rear seat entertainment. ing function. Wheel-selective torque control supplements the work of the frontwheel drive and the quattro drive.

Driving dynamics

The handling of new A4 makes a great leap forward: on the one hand sporty and performance oriented, but with a focus on comfort at the same time. The suspension and steering filter out disturbances such as an uneven road surface, but communicate to the driver important information such as increases Powerful four-cylinder engines The new Audi A4 will be launched in the Middle East with three TFSI engines. Their power output has increased significantly and ranges from 150 hp to 252 hp, but fuel consumption has been reduced by up to 21 percent. All the engines combine high efficiency with sporty power delivery and smoothness.

The new Audi A4 has a groundbreaking innovation for the gasoline engines: The 2.0 TFSI ultra with 190 hp uses an absolutely new combustion method that makes it especially efficient and allows fuel consumption of 4.8 liters per 100 km and CO2 emissions of 109 g/km.

in lateral forces and tracking. This performance is based on the redeveloped five-link axles and the electromechanical power steering - they are exceptionally light. They lay the foundation for dynamic handling and first-class ride comfort while also reducing fuel consumption. Additional options are dynamic steering, which varies its ratio according to the car's speed and the steering angle, and suspension with adjustable shock absorbers with which the driver can for the first time select between two settings: sports or comfort. Both of suspension settings are included in the Audi drive select driving-dynamics system, which is standard equipment for models with engines 190 hp and above.

to stay in lane and the Stop&Go adaptive cruise control including traffic-jam assist eases driving in slow-moving traffic. One special feature of traffic-jam assist is its control strategy. It takes into account a large number of parameters such as road markings and the traffic ahead. Some more innovations that make important contributions to safety are parking assist, rear cross-traffic assist, exit warning, collision avoidance assist, turn assist and the Audi pre-sense systems.

The new Audi A4 will be available from dealerships in the region as of first quarter 2016. Its standard equipment is even more comprehensive than that of its predecessor. It includes xenon headlights, keyless go, a Bluetooth interface, Audi drive select and a 7-inch MMI color display.

ANBANG: FROM AUTO INSURANCE TO GLOBAL BUYER OF LUXURY HOTELS China giant's assets doubled to $253bn since 2014

BEIJING: China's Anbang Insurance Group Co has emerged from near obscurity 18 months ago to sign deals worth more than $30 billion, moving into the big league of global real estate and finance.

The Beijing-based firm has offered $12.8 billion for US hotel operator Starwood and also agreed this month to pay Blackstone Group $6.5 billion for Strategic Hotels & Resorts Inc, whose 16 luxury properties include the Four Seasons Washington DC. Established in 2004 as an automotive and property insurer by chairman Wu Xiaohui, a native of China's entrepreneurial coastal city Wenzhou, Anbang is looking to use its 1.65 trillion yuan ($253 billion) in assets to transform into a worldwide investor.

"Anbang will have a global footprint. In 10 years, Anbang will have companies on all the world's continents," Wu, who is 49 and married to Deng Zhuorui, a granddaughter of Chinese patriarch Deng Xiaoping, told students at Harvard University last year.

Business associates describe Wu as passionate, impatient and very ambitious. He often travels by private jet accompanied by a retinue of assistants. His acquisition strategy is underpinned by an aggressive pursuit of yield-producing companies, those business associates say, funded by cash from selling insurance products and other sources.

In October 2014, Anbang agreed to pay $1.95 billion for the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York, a move Wu said brought the insurer "extra brand recognition" and business opportunities.

Last year, Anbang agreed to buy US insurer Fidelity & Guaranty Life for $1.6 billion, and paid around $1 billion for South Korea's Tong Yang Life Insurance Co. It has also bought control of Fidea, a Belgium based insurer, and the Belgian banking operations of Dutch insurer Delta Lloyd. It is in talks to buy Allianz's South Korean operations.

At home, Anbang has a leading stake in China Minsheng Banking Corp Ltd , the country's biggest private lender, and is a significant shareholder in China Vanke Co, the largest residential property developer.

CONNECTIONS

When he set up Anbang, Wu enlisted a small consortium of private and state investors led by Shanghai Automotive Industry Group Corp, the parent of a government-owned automaker that has ventures with General Motors and Volkswagen. State-owned China Petrochemical Corp later bought a stake. Anbang's original board included Levin Zhu, former CEO of China International Capital Corp and son of former premier Zhu Rongji, and Long Yongtu, China's chief negotiator when it joined the World Trade Organization. Wu also turned to Chen Xiaolu, a son of Chinese Marshal Chen Yi, for support.

Anbang holds licenses for selling property, life and health insurance, and operates an annuity insurance business and asset management arm. It doesn't publish group finances, but says its assets have more than doubled since December 2014. Two subsidiaries, Anbang Life Insurance and Anbang Annuity Insurance, raised 49 billion yuan ($7.53 billion) in investment funds last year, mainly through selling high-yielding universal life insurance policies. — Reuters

BOJ KEEPS MONETARY POLICY UNCHANGED DESPITE RISKS

TOKYO: Japan central bank choose yesterday to keep its monetary policy mostly unchanged but noted a raft of risks for an economy making scant headway toward a sustained recovery.

Analysts had been divided over whether the Bank of Japan would expand its lavish asset purchases or cut interest rates still further to spur growth. The decision to wait-and-see took share prices lower in most regional markets. Japan's economy contracted in the last quarter of 2015, buffeted by the slowdown in China and other emerging economies. Recent data suggest it might shrink again during this quarter, in what would be Japan's third "technical recession," or two straight quarters of contraction, in four years.

"While the BOJ refrained from adding more stimulus today, sluggish economic activity and the stronger yen suggest that policymakers will have to announce more easing soon," Marcel Thieliant of Capital Economics said in a research note.

The continued weakness prompted the BOJ to impose a "negative interest rate" policy that took effect last month and requires banks to pay a fee of 0.1 percent on excess reserves kept at the central bank.

That measure followed similar moves in Europe but is unpopular with financial circles and the public, who are seeing rates paid on their own savings deposits shrink ever closer to zero.

The BOJ's meeting comes just ahead of a meeting this week by the US Federal Reserve that will be closely watched for hints of possible future rate hikes. Japan's interest rates have remained near zero for years. Under BOJ Gov. Haruhiko Kuroda, the central bank has been buying roughly 80 trillion yen ($700 billion) of government bonds and other assets a year.

The injections of cash into the economy are meant to drive prices higher, prompting businesses and consumers to spend more, but demand has remained tepid, falling 1.2 percent from a year earlier in the October to December quarter. Given that trend, the BOJ's description of private demand as "resilient" marked a "fresh high of absurdity," Thieliant said.

Japan's current spring "labor offensive" is expected to yield only modest wage increases, despite appeals to the business community to do more to help support the economy. The BOJ's statement yesterday noted a slowdown in housing and public investments and recent volatility in global financial markets. It forecast that exports and industrial output would remain sluggish and said inflation was likely to stay at about 0 percent for now but eventually climb toward a 2 percent target set three nearly years ago. —AP

BOARD EFFECTIVENESS KEY TO UNLOCKING GROWTH IN TODAY'S ENVIRONMENT: BDI TWO-DAY WORKSHOP HELD IN SPONSORSHIP WITH EMIRATES NBD

KUWAIT: At a time of unprecedented change for the region, board effectiveness is crucial for businesses to unlock growth in today's market environment and stimulate economic diversification, as highlighted during the 21st edition of the Foundation of Directorship Workshop conducted by the GCC Board Directors Institute (BDI) in sponsorship with Emirates NBD. The two-day workshop commenced yesterday at the Meydan Hotel in Dubai.

"Today, board effectiveness is an integral part of every board's reality; the success of most top tier companies - from publically listed to family-owned businesses is driven by an effective board structure and composition," said Jane Valls, Executive Director, GCC Board Directors Institute (BDI). "I feel privileged to lead the Institute during a time where the pace of change is faster than ever before. The Board Directors Institute recognises that increasing regulation, greater competition, new business models, technical innovation and increasing stakeholder expectations are changing traditional approaches to board leadership; similarly, boards are increasingly faced with uncertainty caused by market volatility. It is our aim to prepare directors so that they can adapt to today's complex world."

During the alumni dinner taking place on the eve of the Foundations of Directorship Workshop, H.E. Obaid Al Zaabi, Acting CEO, Securities and Commodities Authority (SCA), emphasised: "There is no doubt 2016 will be a challenging year for all of us, where the ability to unlock growth will be crucial. Implemented in the right way, the pillars of board effectiveness can guide businesses, help them grow and ensure sustainability. A higher level of corporate governance obligations in the region will significantly impact board structure, processes and protocols, with businesses becoming more and more performance driven. Directors need to make sure that they remain focused on strategy, risk, the financials and management oversight, and are clear about their duties, obligations and liabilities, both individual and collective."

"The purpose of the Foundations of Directorship workshop is to delve deeper into the changing roles and accountabilities of the board and its directors, unwrapping the secret of a model board and the right operating model under current market conditions," added Valls.

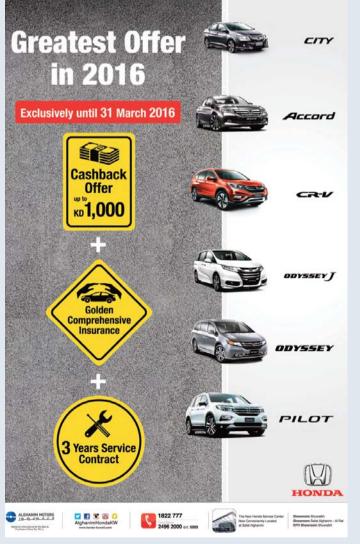

The GCC Board Directors Institute has established one of the region's largest and most influential networks of more than 620 board members in the region. This year, the Institute's Foundations of Directorship workshops will see over 50 participants who will discuss and share past experience, whilst exploring and analysing potential solutions, tools and effective practices for boards and directors in the GCC region. The two day workshop is preceded by an alumni dinner, sponsored by Emirates NBD - one of the Institute's founding members and a leading bank in the region.

GOOGLE ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE PROGRAM BEATS S KOREAN GO PRO WITH 4-1 SCORE COMPLEXITY OF GO SEEN A KEY TEST FOR AI SCIENTISTS

SEOUL: Google's artificial intelligence (AI) program yesterday beat South Korean professional Lee Sedol in the ancient board game Go, recovering from Sunday's loss to win its fourth match in a five-game series. AlphaGo, developed by Google subsidiary DeepMind, had already clinched a series victory with its third win on Saturday, in a result that shocked the world.

The program made history last year by becoming the first machine to beat a human pro player, but 33-year-old Lee, one of the world's top players, was seen as a much more formidable opponent. "I am disappointed that the matches are over, and also disappointed that I could not end the series on a high note," Lee told reporters, thanking fans for their support and adding that he had wholeheartedly enjoyed the games. "I think the humans still have a good chance," he added.

Go, most popular in countries such as China, South Korea and Japan, involves two contestants moving black and white stones across a square grid, aiming to seize the most territory. It is perfect for artificial intelligence research because there are simply too many moves for a machine to win by brute-force calculations, the route IBM's Deep Blue used to famously beat former world chess champion Garry Kasparov in 1997. "It was just an incredible game," DeepMind founder Demis Hassabis told reporters. Until AlphaGo's victory last year, experts had not expected an artificial intelligence program to beat a human professional for at least a decade.

The program's developers overcame the hurdles it faced with a design that enabled it to learn on its own, hoping it would be able to approximate human intuition by studying old matches and using simulated games to hone itself. "AlphaGo's win is important, because, unlike techniques used in previous programs, it is applicable generally, and can be used for many other things," said Daniel Sleator, a computer science professor at Carnegie Mellon University. Google executives say they aim to apply the technology underlying AlphaGo to create algorithms and programs to assist humans in fields from medical care to scientific research and robotics.

Last week, Eric Schmidt, executive chairman of Google parent Alphabet Inc, told reporters he expected the technology would eventually be deployed across all of Google's services. "Artificial Intelligence can help find new strategies in fields such as health care or law," said Lee Sang-wan, a professor of brain and cognitive engineering at the Korea Advanced Institute of Science and Technology. The Korea Baduk Association yesterday awarded AlphaGo an honorary professional 9-dan title, the highest possible rank and the same as that held by Lee, for exhibiting creative and brilliant skills and contributing to the game's progress. Go Ratings, a website that ranks Go players worldwide, placed AlphaGo as fourth best, with Lee Sedol following, in fifth place. — Reuters

CHINESE HACKERS BEHIND US RANSOMWARE ATTACKS

NNEW YORK: Hackers using tactics and tools previously associated with Chinese government-supported computer network intrusions have joined the booming cyber crime industry of ransomware, four security firms that investigated attacks on US companies said. Ransomware, which involves encrypting a target's computer files and then demanding payment to unlock them, has generally been considered the domain of run-of-the-mill cyber criminals.

But executives of the security firms have seen a level of sophistication in at least a half dozen cases over the last three months akin to those used in statesponsored attacks, including techniques to gain entry and move around the networks, as well as the software used to manage intrusions. "It is obviously a group of skilled of operators that have some amount of experience conducting intrusions," said Phil Burdette, who heads an incident response team at Dell SecureWorks.

Burdette said his team was called in on three cases in as many months where hackers spread ransomware after exploiting known vulnerabilities in application servers. From there, the hackers tricked more than 100 computers in each of the companies into installing the malicious programs. The victims included a transportation company and a technology firm that had 30 percent of its machines captured. Security firms Attack Research, InGuardians and G-C Partners, said they had separately investigated three other similar ransomware attacks since December. Although they cannot be positive, the companies concluded that all were the work of a known advanced threat group from China, Attack Research Chief Executive Val Smith told Reuters. The ransomware attacks have not previously been reported. None of the companies that were victims of the hackers agreed to be identified publicly. The security companies investigating the advanced ransomware intrusions have various theories about what is behind them, but they do not have proof and they have not come to any firm conclusions. Most of the theories flow from the possibility that the Chinese government has reduced its support for economic espionage, which it pledged to oppose in an agreement with the United States late last year. Some US companies have reported a decline in Chinese hacking since the agreement.

plement their income via ransomware. It is also possible, Burdette said, that companies which had been penetrated for trade secrets or other reasons in the past were now being abandoned as China backs away, and that spies or their associates were taking as much as they could on the way out. In one of Dell's cases, the means of access by the team spreading ransomware was established in 2013.

The cyber security experts could not completely rule out more prosaic explanations, such as the possibility that ordinary criminals had improved their skills and bought tools previously used only by governments. Dell said that some of the malicious software had been associated by other security firms with a group dubbed Codoso, which has a record of years of attacks of interest to the Chinese government, including those on US defense companies and sites that draw Chinese minorities.

Payment in bitcoin

Ransomware has been around for years, spread by some of the same people that previously installed fake antivirus programs on home computers and badgered the victims into paying to remove imaginary threats. In the past two years, better encryption techniques have often made it impossible for victims to regain access to their files without cooperation from the hackers. Many ransomware payments are made in the virtual currency Bitcoin and remain secret, but institutions including a Los Angeles hospital have gone public about ransomware attacks. Ransomware operators generally set modest prices that many victims are willing to pay, and they usually do decrypt the files, which ensures that victims will post positively online about the transaction, making the next victims who research their predicament more willing to pay. Security software companies have warned that because the aggregate payoffs for ransomware gangs are increasing, more criminals will shift to it from credit card theft and other complicated scams. The involvement of more sophisticated hackers also promises to intensify the threat. InGuardians CEO Jimmy Alderson said one of the cases his company investigated appeared to have been launched with online credentials stolen six months earlier in a suspected espionage hack of the sort typically called an Advanced Persistent Threat, or APT. "The tactics of getting access to these networks are APT tactics, but instead of going further in to sit and listen stealthily, they are used for smashand-grab," Alderson said. — Reuters

AVAYA INTRODUCES SMARTDXAAS A UNIQUE APPROACH TO ENABLE BUSINESSES

DUBAI: Avaya introduces its concept of Digital Transformation-as-a-Service - SmartDXaaS - to emerging markets, with the company highlighting its range of cloud-based solutions and professional services, designed to help organizations achieve their digital transformation objectives more easily and cost-effectively, at the annual Avaya Technology Forum in Dubai. The flagship technology event, the latest round in a series that will move on to Ireland and the US, will also see Avaya host a complete "Smart City" ecosystem in Dubai, with real-world demonstrations from public and private-sector organizations.

While enterprise CEOs are increasingly placing digital transformation at the center of their corporate strategies, organizations need trusted partners that can help them navigate today's uncertain environments, while preparing for the challenges of tomorrow. According to IDC, by 2018 70% of silo-ed digital transformation initiatives will fail due to insufficient collaboration, integration, sourcing or project management, while by 2020 more than 30% of existing IT vendors will not survive in their current forms, requiring customers to realign their preferred vendor relationships.

Speaking at the start of ATF Dubai, Avaya executives outlined how the company has successfully aligned itself with customers' needs: software and services now account for 73% of revenue, with half of all sales coming from new and cloud-enabled technologies. Avaya is also seeing the strongest demand for solutions based on an OPEX model, posting 16% year-onyear growth in its managed services business, as enterprises increasingly look to cloud-based, customizable solutions. As the only company specializing in complex business communications, built on open and mobile software platforms, and supported by a robust underlying network infrastructure, Avaya is uniquely placed to help drive customers' digital transformation strategies.

NidalAbou-Ltaif, President, Europe, Middle East & Africa and Asia Pacific, Avaya said: "Avaya's successful transition to a software and services company enables us to help organizations achieve their own digital transformation goals. SmartDXaaS is about delivering digital transformation at customers' own pace and path, with less disruption than our competitors. By leveraging our vertical industry focus, expertise and innovative technology solutions, emerging-market organizations today can take charge of their own transformation curve, and position themselves effectively against global competitors."

Visitors to ATF Dubai will experience Avaya's vision for the endless possibilities of Smart applications, all of which can be customized to suit any sector or industry-specific needs. Today, innovative private and public sector players are utilizing the latest technologies, such as mobile, cloud, social, Big Data and analytics, and the Internet of Things, to build working environments that create the building blocks of a true "Smart City" development. By leveraging Avaya's vertical-industry experience, key foundation elements - including Smart Education, Smart Healthcare, Smart Public Safety, and more - can be combined to create a complete Smart City ecosystem that meets the needs of its stakeholders.

At ATF 2016, attendees can uniquely experience: In-depth technical sessions and tailored expert engagement that showcase vertical smart solutions for governments and private sector businesses that streamline and simplify deployment. The showcase is presented in a "smart city" environment, with real deployment examples of key industry verticals, including smart public safety, education, hospitality, banking amongst others.

AMAZON SEEKS PATENT FOR BUYING ITEMS WITH A LOOK

SAN FRANCISCO: Online retail colossus Amazon is seeking a US patent on using selfies-instead of passwords for shopping when using smartphones. Seattle-based Amazon reasoned that combining sensor and camera capabilities in smartphones with face and gesture recognizing software results in higher security than passwords or identification numbers.

"Such approaches provide for user authentication without the user having to physically interact with a computing device, which can enable a user to access information by looking at a camera, performing a simple gesture such as a smile, or performing another such action," Amazon said in a patent application filed late last year. "Such an authentication can be user friendly, particularly with respect to conventional approaches such as typing and remembering long passwords, and can provide enhanced security because it can be difficult for another person to replicate a user's face in three dimensions."

Smartphone cameras would capture video snippets to avoid being duped by a fraudster using someone's picture to impersonate them in an online transaction, according to the patent application. "The device can prompt the user to perform certain actions, motions, or gestures, such as to smile, blink, or tilt his or her head." the patent application said. Chinese internet giant Alibaba and payments firm Mastercard are reported to be working on incorporating facial recognition in transaction confirmations. — AFP

NIGER FIGHTS BACK AGAINST 'CURSE' OF FISTULA

NIAMEY: "I was at death's door. I'd just lost my child who was stillborn and my husband abandoned me," recalls Hadiza Zakaria who suffered a fistula while pregnant-a condition seen as a curse in Niger. Obstetric fistula is a childbirth injury caused by a complicated labour which can leave victims with chronic incontinence and often results in them becoming social outcasts. A preventable condition, it affects around a million of the world's poorest women, and is widespread in this west African nation which has the highest birthrate in the world.

"It's a public health problem whose scope is beyond us," says Dr Abdou Amada Traore, who volunteers to help women suffering from the condition he describes as a national "scourge". The condition arises from a complicated labor where a woman can struggle for days without giving birth, with the pressure of the baby's head cutting off blood supply to delicate tissues, causing a hole to form between the vagina and the bladder or rectum. Although such complications could be solved by a Caesarian section, for those without access to emergency medical care, the result can be devastating the baby often dies and the mother develops a fistula which causes urinary or rectal incontinence.

One of the groups at the heart of the struggle is Dimol, a local NGO which is dedicated to the prevention of fistula, to treating the victims and to helping them be reintegrate back into society. Funded entirely from donations, the charity helps around 60 women a year at its center in Niger's capital, Niamey, helping them both prepare for and recover from corrective surgery. Although an

'Seen as a curse'

Once a housewife in a remote village, Zakaria, 48, now makes a living selling 'boule', a traditional grainy porridge-like dish which she prepares. She is a frequent visitor to Dimol where she offers support to younger women, telling them her story of complications in labor which resulted in her losing the baby. She ended up with urinary incontinence and her husband left her. Eventually, she found help through Dimol where she underwent surgery and started rebuilding her life. "One of the problems with a fistula is that it's often seen as a curse," explains Imorou Nafissatou, who works with the charity.

"Because of the smell, people believe the woman's being punished, that it's witchcraft or that she's committed adultery... She's often shunned and rejected. She herself doesn't understand what's happening to her." Often the women become depressed and can even develop dementia, she says. Some 20 veiled women and a gaggle of children live in the small house run by Dimol on the outskirts of Niamey, where a teacher regularly visits to give them basic literacy classes. They also work on old pedal sewing machines. "That's part of their treatment-it forces them to move their legs and get the blood circulating," explains Dimol's Sana Ousmane.

Children giving birth

A "social disease", the condition is symptomatic of "poverty and often a consequence of teenage marriage," Nafissatou explains. In Niger, one of the world's poorest countries, young women in rural areas often go without pre-natal consultations, says Dimol founder Salamatou Traore. Girls also marry very young, often giving birth before their bodies are ready for it, with UN figures showing one in three girls in Niger are married off before age 15 and three quarters before the age of 18.

"We sometimes have girls who give birth without having had their periods-children of 12." The result? "We have very young girls giving birth who are not morphologically or anatomically ready to do so," says Dr Abdou. "I often say that ending up with fistula is lucky. Often they die," he says.

Reintegration is key

One of the victims is 16-year-old Hadjura Zerifili, who was married at 12 and lost her baby several months ago. "At the start, I was ashamed (at becoming incontinent). My parents initially thought I was doing it on purpose but later they understood," she says. "All I want is to have my health back. Since I arrived here I feel better. I see other women here and that reassures me," the teenager says. Maimouna Moukaila Salman, 20, is all smiles. She has been through her surgery and is now getting ready to be "reintegrated" into her village.

"I am cured. I want to go home to my husband," she says. But first, she will have to spend several months with her family to allow the scars to heal before heading home. Reintegration is very important, Traore says. "We hold a ceremony which allows us to pass on a message to other women who might have a fistula to show that they can be healed," she says. "The women who return are much more fulfilled," she says. "They have more self-confidence and they can serve as an example."—AFP

INFRASTRUCTURE INEQUALITY IS CATALYST FOR BRAZIL'S ZIKA EPIDEMIC

'IT'S THE SAME CITY BUT THE HEALTH SITUATION COULDN'T BE MORE DIFFERENT'

RIO DE JANEIRO: The mosquito, a Brazilian saying goes, is a democratic devil - it bites rich and poor alike. But an outbreak of the Zika virus has revealed deep inequality when it comes to who bears the brunt of living among the insects. "You can see the swarms of mosquitoes around the trash heaps here in my neighborhood," said Gleyse da Silva, who lives in one of the poorest parts of Brazil's northeastern city of Recife, at the epicenter of the Zika outbreak. Silva contracted the mosquito-borne virus while pregnant and gave birth in October to Maria - one of more than 700 children born with microcephaly in Brazil since the Zika outbreak was detected last year.

The condition, strongly suspected to be linked to the virus, is marked by stunted head and brain growth, leading to developmental problems. The densely packed Ibura neighborhood where Silva lives lies a short distance from Recife's glossy beach-front high-rises but conditions are a world apart. Its streets, home to over 50,000 people, are strewn with rubbish and just 10 percent of households have sewage or running water, making it a fertile breeding ground for mosquitoes. "Sometimes the city comes to collect the garbage, but mostly it just piles up," the 27-year-old told Reuters. Brazil made significant gains against inequality over the past decade, hauling some 40 million people out of poverty. But the Zika outbreak, detected for the first time in the Americas last year, and the worst recession in decades have exposed the limits of Brazil's faded boom. Decades of rapid and chaotic urbanization in the nation of 205 million people have left many impoverished areas without basic sanitation, putting the poor at far greater risk of contracting Zika and other mosquito-borne viruses. Some 35 million Brazilians have no running water, over 100 million have no access to sewage, and more than 8 million city dwellers live in areas that lack reqular garbage services, according to the most recent census in 2010. Last year, some 1.6 million cases of the dengue virus were reported, the most since records began in 1990. The virus, spread by the same Aedes aegypti mosquito as Zika, kills hundreds annually. "The only thing that is going to break the cycle of epidemics will be a sharp increase in the investment and construction of infrastructure that provides basic sanitation," said Dr Vera Magalhaes, professor of tropical medicine at the Federal University of Pernambuco in Recife, where she has spent three decades studying dengue and now Zika. "Until that happens, we'll live with this contrast in Brazil, where the rich have firstworld sanitation and the poor live in the most precarious conditions imaginable, making them by far the most vulnerable to these illnesses."

PEOPLE WITH HIV IN ASIA EJECTED FROM HOSPITALS, WOMEN STERILIZED

BANGKOK: Some health workers in Asia are refusing to perform surgery and provide services for people living with HIV, and are even expelling patients from hospitals and forcing women to undergo sterilization, according to grassroots organizations. In China and Vietnam, discrimination took the form of changing the recommended option for treatment from surgery to topical or oral medication, said the four-country study supported by Asia Catalyst, which provides management training for community-based health organizations.

In Myanmar and Cambodia, patients with HIV were relegated to segregated waiting areas and bed spaces. One HIV-positive woman in Myanmar said doctors told staff not to give her a hospital bed, so she slept for two nights in the barracks for security guards. "You see the fear and misinformation that's in the medical setting," said Gareth Durrant, Asia Catalyst's Bangkok-based director of capacity building and community initiatives. pain, the first hospital was unable to help me and referred me to this hospital. They did not help. Fortunately, I delivered (the baby) on my own in the waiting room," a woman in the southern Cambodian province of Kampot was quoted as saying in the report. After their HIV status became known to service providers, some patients two each from China and Myanmar, and three from Cambodia - were forced to leave the hospital, including a Cambodian woman forced out before she learned how to prevent transmission of HIV to her newborn baby.

Some healthcare providers made sterilization a condition of providing pregnancyrelated services to women with HIV. One woman in Yangon was sterilized without her knowledge or consent, the report said. "I don't think anyone was surprised that discrimination happens" Durrant told the Thomson Reuters Foundation. "What was interesting was that when you give grassroots organizations the tools to go back to their communities and say what's going on, document it... they can identify problems they know are happening in the communities and then come back and tell their governments about it." CBOs in Myanmar managed to meet health authorities and police to discuss the findings in the Asia Catalyst report, resulting in a recognition by authorities of the need to pay more attention to at-risk populations, Durrant said. "Communities for a long time said this hospital is bad, or the doctor is not good, but they did not put into a framework of this is a human rights violation that should never have occurred," he said. "Once they've (the CBO staff) been through training and understand everyone has a fundamental right to health ... it changes the narrative from a doctor who was not good to a human rights violation."—Reuters

Different worlds

About 1,200 miles (2,000 km) southwest of Recife, Marcos Lira and his wife, Fatima, take a morning stroll along a seawall in Rio de Janeiro's wealthy Urca neighborhood, their healthy 2-month-old son Davi Luiz cradled in his father's arms. Urca has one of Rio's lower rates of dengue, despite being surrounded by lush vegetation. "We were worried about Zika, given all the news and the fact my wife was pregnant during such a scare," said Marcos Lira, his boy asleep on his shoulder. "But here they pick up the garbage three times a week and everybody has water in their house." Lira, the superintendent for a luxury condo where he lives rent-free, grew up in the poor northern Rio neighborhood of Vila Isabel. The rate of dengue was five times higher there than in Urca last year, government statistics show.

"It's the same city but the health situation couldn't be more different," he said. "Urca is a world apart from where I was raised." Brazil does not track the economic class of Zika victims but the virus appears to be disproportionately affecting the poor. Reuters has interviewed over 40 women who contracted Zika during pregnancy and gave birth to a child with microcephaly. The interviews, conducted in both advanced hospitals where they sought treatment and towns and neighborhoods where they live, showed all of the women came from a poor background.

Even in the parched interior of northeastern Paraiba state, where conditions are far less favorable for mosquitoes than in tropical Rio, poor infrastructure allows them to flourish. Josemary da Silva, the mother of a 5-month-old boy born with microcephaly, only has running water in her cramped one-room home when a truck arrives to fill a makeshift cistern she shares with a neighbor.

"Weeks go by before we see that truck," said Silva, 34, who is unemployed and gets by on a government cash-transfer program that provides her about $100 a month. "In the meantime, we have to buy water, 10 little buckets at a time." Across the region, residents store water in any container available - often without lids creating the ideal habitat for Aedes aegypti to lay its eggs. "Even with a net my baby wakes up covered in bites," said the mother of four. "There's nothing I can do against the mosquitoes. There's too many of them."

'No political imperative'

Brazil increased sanitation investment in recent years, virtually all focused on expanding patchwork or non-existent water and sewage networks in cities with over 500,000 people. But a watchdog group monitoring nearly 350 projects says Brazil's notorious bureaucracy and inability to complete infrastructure projects has led to one-fourth of the works being paralyzed and another one-fifth suspended. "What's shocking is that we're the world's seventh or eighth largest economy, and despite our current economic crisis, there is no lack of money that could be put toward making these vital improvements," said Magalhaes, the professor in Recife. "But it's obviously not a political imperative to do so."

There was a period when Brazil and other Latin American nations made huge advances against the Aedes aegypti as part of efforts to wipe out yellow fever, which the mosquito spreads. In 1958, the Pan-American Health Organization declared Brazil free of the insect. A decade later, after political will and institutional funding dried up, the mosquito was back. It returned as Brazil was rapidly urbanizing, with tens of millions flooding into cities. Today more than 11 million Brazilians live in slums that provide footholds for mosquitoes in urban areas. Infrastructure experts forecast it could be decades before Brazil achieves universal sanitation. For now, soldiers go door-to-door in the hardest-hit areas, inspecting homes for open containers with standing water, which mosquitoes seek out to lay their eggs. TV campaigns tell citizens to use repellants the poor cannot afford and wear long-sleeve shirts and pants in the tropical summer. — Reuters

The Asia-Pacific region is home to 4.8 million people living with HIV, the majority of them living in 12 countries: China, Cambodia, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Myanmar, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Thailand and Vietnam. Asia Catalyst trained and supported staff from eight communitybased organizations - two each in Cambodia, China, Myanmar and Vietnam. From May to July 2015 the staff interviewed 202 people living with HIV - 149 women, 15 transgender people and 38 men. Fifty-one interviewees from all four countries reported being denied care after disclosure of their HIV status, including pregnancy-related services for women in Cambodia and general health services for sex workers in Myanmar and Vietnam.

YOUTH IN WELL-OFF NATIONS SMOKE, DRINK LESS THAN IN 2010

PARIS: The number of teenagers trying alcohol or cigarettes before they turn 14 has dropped, especially among girls, according to a World Health Organization study of 42 well-off nations. From 2010 to 2014, the percentage of 15-yearold boys in Europe, Canada and Israel who said they'd smoked their first cigarette at 13 fell from 26 to 22 among boys-but plunged from 22 to 13 for girls. Alcohol use among young teens in the 42 countries canvassed also went down over the same period, by about 10 percent.

But when it came to boozing, the percentage of 13-and-under girls who indulged weeklywhile still smaller than for boys-did not decline as much, narrowing the gender gap. "Health behaviors along with social habits and attitudes acquired in the critical second decade of a young person's life can carry on into adulthood and affect the entire life-course," said Zsuzsanna Jakab, WHO regional director for Europe. "A good start can last a lifetime," she said in a statement. Conducted every four years, the survey examines self-perception and risky behavior among 11-, 13- and 15-year olds.

Greenland, Lithuania, Estonia, Latvia and the Czech Republic topped the list of young smokers in 2014, with 38 to 56 percent of boys, and 36 to 53 percent of girls, saying they had already lit up by age 13. The countries with the lowest rates of reported tobacco use at the same age were Iceland, Albania, Canada, Norway and Spain. In Europe, 16 percent of all deaths in adults over 30 are due to tobacco-the highest rate of all WHO regions. Studies have shown that exposure to nicotine during adolescence can have lasting effect on brain development.

Most countries have taken steps to discourage teens from smoking, including banning point-of-sale displays, aggressive public service campaigns, and stiff taxes. France, Ireland and Britain are also moving toward plain packaging. Bulgaria tops the list for regular drinking among early teens, with 13 and 20 percent of 13-yearold girls and boys respectively saying they consume alcohol at least one a week.

Boys fat, girls think they are

By age 15, those percentages have climbed to 17 and 32 respectively. Romania, Albania, Croatia, Greece and Italy fill out the top of the list, while Norway, Iceland, Ireland, Netherlands and Spain have the most abstemious adolescents. When it came to getting flat-out drunk, Denmark topped the ranking of 15-year-oldsnearly 40 percent-who had been plastered at least twice, with Hungary, Lithuania, Bulgaria and Scotland rounding out the top five.

England had the distinction of being the only country in which a higher percentage of girls (31) had been seriously boozed up than boys (25). The Health Behavior in School-aged Children survey also gathered statistics on obesity-an objective measure-as well as how teens felt about their weight, a subjective one. The numbers in both categories are very different for boys and girls. At eleven years old, more than 25 percent of boys are obese or overweight in three-quarters of the countries surveyed.

That figure drops to half of the countries at age 13, and about a quarter at age 15. For the opposite sex, however, there is no nation in which more than 25 percent of girls-in any age bracket-tip the scales that far, except one: Malta. The other countries with the chubbiest young-sters are Greece, Canada, Greenland and Bulgaria. — AFP

EXPERIMENTAL BLOOD TEST MAY FIND MULTIPLE DISEASES

MIAMI: An experimental blood test may one day be able to detect a range of diseases including cancer and multiple sclerosis, based on signatures of DNA from dying cells, researchers said Monday. The work, described in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, a peer-reviewed US journal, is still in its early stages, but opens up vast possibilities, the study authors said. "We view this is as a breakthrough with huge potential, but it will not be realized very soon," said co-author Yuval Dor, a professor at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. "We are working hard on this but this is far from clinical use," Dor said in an email to AFP.

So far, the method has been tested on 320 patients and controls, and has shown success in finding diseases such as pancreatic cancer, pancreatitis, diabetes, traumatic brain injury and multiple sclerosis. When cells die, it can mean a disease is just beginning to take hold in the body-perhaps a tumor is forming, or an autoimmune or neurodegenerative illness. Scientists have already known for some time that dying cells release fragmented DNA into the circulating blood. The new method can identify a unique chemical modification called methylation. These methylation patterns reveal the specific identity of cells.

"Our work demonstrates that the tissue origins of circulating DNA can be measured in humans," said co-author Ruth Shemer of the Hebrew University. "This represents a new method for sensitive detection of cell death in specific tissues, and an exciting approach for diagnostic medicine," she said. Researchers stressed that far more work is needed before the test can be brought to the public. Also, the range of diseases that can be detected is small, so far. And it remains unclear how much the testing might cost. Dor said the technology is based on next-generation DNA sequencing, which is becoming less expensive every year. "I expect the cost will not be a major factor," Dor said. "There are still technical improvements needed, and more testing on larger populations, in particular in a setting that can actually predict disease." — AFP

ENVIRONMENT BEHIND NEARLY QUARTER OF GLOBAL DEATHS

GENEVA: One in four deaths worldwide are due to environmental factors like air, water and soil pollution, as well as unsafe roads and workplace stress, the World Health Organization (WHO) said yesterday. An estimated 12.6 million people died in 2012 as a result of living and working in unhealthy environments, 23 percent of all deaths reported globally, according to the new study. "If countries do not take actions to make environments where people live and work healthy, millions will continue to become ill and die too young," warned WHO chief Margaret Chan in a statement.

The report defines environmental causes broadly, drawing links between a long line of environmental risk factors like pollution, chemical exposure, climate change, ultraviolet radiation and access to firearms and more than 100 diseases and injuries. As many as 8.2 million of the deaths could be blamed on air pollution, including exposure to second-hand smoke, responsible for heart disease, cancers and chronic respiratory disease, the report said. Among the deaths attributed to environmental factors were 1.7 million caused by "unintentional injuries", including road accidents. The report also counted 846,000 diarrhoeal disease deaths among environmental mortalities, adding that many were linked to pollution and unsafe drinking water.

Road accidents, suicides

The WHO reported 246,000 deaths due to intentional injuries, including suicides, which it linked to among other things the unsafe storage and access to firearms, but also to pesticides, which are used in a full third of the world's suicides. The report found that most environmentally-linked deaths happened in South-East Asia, which accounted for 3.8 million such deaths in 2012, followed by the Western Pacific region with 3.5 million. The least affected region was the

STUDY REVEALS SCOPE OF WESTERN DRUG TESTING IN EAST GERMANY

BERLIN: Major Western drug companies conducted hundreds of clinical tests on citizens of communist East Germany during the Cold War, a report released yesterday said, but dismissed charges of widespread ethical abuses. The long-awaited report on a scheme designed to provide hard currency to the cash-strapped regime confirmed some allegations leveled in a 2013 article by news magazine Der Spiegel, albeit on a much smaller scale than first thought. But the Western companies "benefited from totalitarianism." and chronic drug shortages in the East, it said.

Berlin's Charite university hospital said it found that 320 clinical trials were carried out in the 1980s on people in the so-called German Democratic Republic. The research team led by medical historian Volker Hess found evidence of up to 900 studies by Western firms using East Germans between 1961 and 1990, the year Germany reunified. But Hess told reporters that the studies appeared to have been in line with the standards and laws of the time, noting that practices in the West were also more lax in those decades. "What appears dubious to us today was not specific to the GDR, even though some of it appears ethically dubious now," he said. "We have seen no indication of a systematic violation of existing rules on consent." The tests were carried out for 75 companies from 16 countries, mainly from West Germany but also Switzerland, France, the United States and Britain. Some of the biggest names in the industry were involved including Bayer, Pfizer and Roche. The study's authors dismissed speculation that the Western companies looked beyond the Iron Curtain for subjects because the trials would be cheaper there.

Rather, they saw the heavily centralized GDR as a more efficient testing ground, allowing quick completion of studies without the peering eyes of a critical public. "The companies benefited from totalitarianism," Hess said. Furthermore, the Western firms exploited chronic medication shortages in the East to offer experimental drugs. The Stasi secret police was particularly interested in the studies and kept close tabs on them, and a bureau under its auspices negotiated the contracts with Western companies. The first comprehensive study of its kind was financed by the German government and medical industry associations. The researchers combed through Stasi and patient files as well as reports from the companies themselves and interviewed former test subjects. The Spiegel report had alleged that major Western drug companies used more than 50,000 people in the communist East as "human guinea pigs" for some 600 clinical trials, including for blood pressure and depression drugs, in the 1980s. It said many had been unwitting participants and some even died as a consequence of the tests-charges disputed in the findings presented yesterday. — AFP

BUSTED: FRANCE, CANADA HAVE MOST TEEN POT SMOKERS

PARIS: France and Canada have the highest percentage of 15-year-old pot smokers among 42 well-off nations surveyed by the World Health Organization, the UN agency said in a report yesterday. When it comes to policing marijuana, France is far from the most laid-back country in cive discipline"-also correlated with higher rates of marijuana consumption.

Conducted every four years, the WHO survey examines risky behavior and self-perception among 11-, 13- and 15-year olds in Europe, North America and Israel. In the most recent survey, Europe, so the findings come as something of a surprise. Amsterdam flaunts its cannabis cafes and Barcelona its private reefer clubs, but neither the Netherlands nor Spain were among the top eight nations in which teens admitted they had used cannabis in the last 30 days, according to the study, based on data from 2014.

Fifteen percent of 15-year-olds in France-slightly more boys than girls said they had indulged, with Canada's young stoners close behind. Italy, Switzerland and Bulgaria rounded out the top five, with French-speaking parts of Belgium as well as Poland and Slovenia in low double digits for boys, and single digits for girls. "Young people in their teenage years are more likely to use cannabis if they have friends or older siblings who do so," the study found. Lax parenting or its opposite-"coer-

France dislodged Canada as No. 1 nation for teen tokers, moving up from fourth place. The United States ranked second in the 2010 survey but was not included in the most recent edition. Among the countries with the fewest adolescent users was Sweden, with only two percent of 15-year-olds saying they had gotten high on ganja in the last month. "Scientific evidence proves that cannabis is a dangerous and harmful substance, especially for children and young people who use it regularly," the study notes. Marijuana is the most used drug in Europe, with 14.6 million young adults lighting up in 2014, according the report. About a dozen countries in Europe have provisions for the medical use of marijuana, including Austria, Britain, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain. — AFP

Americas, with 847,000 deaths blamed on environmental conditions. Europe had 1.4 million environmentally-linked deaths while Africa reported 2.2 million.

The WHO said that better environmental management could prevent the deaths of 1.7 million children under five, who are especially prone to serious illnesses arising from respiratory infections and diarrhea. "There's an urgent need for investment in strategies to reduce environmental risks in our cities, homes and workplaces," said Maria Neira, WHO's public health chief. "Such investments can significantly reduce the rising worldwide burden of cardiovascular and respiratory diseases, injuries and cancers, and lead to immediate savings in healthcare costs," she said. The report is the second of its kind and follows an initial WHO study a decade ago. — AFP

he US Educational Group (USEG) held an education fair on Monday at Marina Hotel in Salmiya. The one-day fair offered students an experience of education in the US. Advisors and admission officers of participating universities addressed students' questions and explained issues like tuition costs, housing, admission tests (TOEFL, SAT, GRE, GMAT) and scholarship opportunities. The education road show was free of charge and open to the public.

Samar Khalif, country director of AMIDEAST, told Kuwait Times that AMIDEAST is helping USEG. "We have this educational fair every year, and Rola Fadlallah, the head of education outreach and placement services, helps USEG manage it in Kuwait," she said. "AMIDEAST helps students with their testing needs in English and most of the major exams required for study in the US, including TOEFL, GRE and SAT. We also offer training classes. AMIDEAST is able to quickly provide muchneeded educational services to the country's students and professionals," said Khalif.

Khalif noted that 21 universities are participating in the fair from all over the United States, added that it is a great oppor-tunity for students to know what suits them the best and what they need to do to get to the university they want. Representatives from USEG provided information about admis-sion chandrade, financial aid appretunities, summer program. sion standards, financial aid opportunities, summer programs and student life at different US universities.

The US universities at the event were: Bradley University, Farleigh Dickinson University, Georgetown University Qatar, Kent State University, Indiana University Purdue University

University of Colorado - Boulder, University of Evansville, University of Hartford, University of Illinois Chicago, University of Iowa, University of Michigan Flint, University of Missouri, Valparaiso University, Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University (Virginia Tech) and West Virginia University.

STAR TRACK

Aries (March 21-April 19)

Your approach to a pressing business matter this morning is guite impressive. A number of business communications require your attention. Despite all odds and detractors, you could be a conquering hero today. Do not rest on your laurels; however, your climb to the top is nearing completion. The way you handle things today could be significant to the future. Later this afternoon you can relax and enjoy the game of life as well as time away from the workplace. This is a pretty good time for your socializing in your personal life. Before setting off on a get-together with friends or family, be sure that you have not overlooked some detail, or your part of a deal within the workplace. A dinner or some fun activity can be enjoyed this evening.

Taurus (April 20-May 20)

Matters concerning a budget are on your mind today. Be patient with yourself. A plan and some patience are necessary ingredients to success. You may have trouble trying to express yourself to someone today-there is little logic and much emotion. This situation, however, makes you an excellent listener to all that seek your guidance. You not only can hear their words but you can empathize with their feelings. There is an increased desire to succeed in the world. You are full of wit and sharp insights. This could be a time for real breakthroughs in the idea department. You are in top form when it comes to mental activity. Remember your friends and family; try to include them in any of your good fortune.

Gemini (May 21-June 20)

You will benefit from a new, long-term project, not only in the workplace but in your home. You are the only one that can persuade the group to expand their thinking-you improve the finances. Change can be hard to contend with but sometimes it is absolutely necessary. Today is one of those days. To ignore the unexpected events of today is to open yourself up for disruptions you cannot control. It is better to control change than to have change control you. A relationship has you on a major high this afternoon. So much of you is reflected back to this other person. You are in the mood for intimate talks. The future has possibilities of moving into areas of opportunity regarding marriage and some positive marriage plans are easy to create.

Cancer (June 21-July 22)

Expect significant slowdowns today. Even if you push with might and main, you might end up with little to show for it except high blood pressure. It is a good time to lie back and let a subject or matter rest a bit. Your emotions are clear and calm. You work to remove any obstacles that might occur but you may be surprised at how things work out on their own. Remember, the obstacles are important but temporary. There is some time later today to sit down and take stock of how things develop and to perhaps, learn from the process. If there is a problem that should surface in the future, you will have some good insight. Your understanding of the needs of others is in perfect balance with your own knowledge. Enjoy your friends this evening,

Leo (July 23-August 22)

You are thankful for the extra business that keeps you busy today. You feel as though you have the world on a string and that string is quite securely tied around your finger! A day like this comes only a few times during the year, so make the most of it now. There is no need to prove yourself to anyone. The only thing is to be careful about unrealistic expectations. An impractical way of thinking may lead you away from any progress you have enjoyed. Think through the outstanding opportunities that are present in your life now and move to bring them into reality. The urge for self-indulgence is strong. Do not restrain yourself but do not overindulge either. Keep a balance in everything you do and you will be happy, healthy and wise.

Virgo (August 23-September 22)

Group meetings, whether you are the teacher or the student, are enlightening this morning. You are in a good position to communicate. If you are asked to contribute information, you will be clearly understood. There could be an occasion to brainstorm with each other in new and interesting ways. With all the wonderful motivational speakers in the marketplace, you and your co-workers are in for a treat. Someone new to your group may need some guidance after the lunch break. You can demonstrate a great understanding and sensitivity to the needs of others, particularly just now. This evening you may only be interested in entertaining your lover. Being unpredictable is one of the things that attract your lover. Exercise will help you to relax tonight.

Libra (September 23-October 22)

🕖 You are enthusiastic to begin your day! You feel good and you feel in harmony with yourself, the entire world and everybody in it. Others can feel this as well and are drawn to you, making this a successful day for any kind of group endeavor. Best of all, relations with the opposite sex are at a peak. This is a super day to go on a date, be married or be in love. You concentrate now on purposeful work with plenty of possibilities for growth. You seem to get the attention and interest of powerful people and moreover, to persuade them to give you a break. You can also see that you have made some great strides in achieving your goals. The dreams of the past are now within your reach. Diet, exercise and work somehow mean more to you now.

Scorpio (October 23-November 21)

Be your usual friendly self today; it is who you know that will help you in your professional life. This may mean better sales for this week or a word to some higher-up that you would be the best for a particular job. As you help someone, you will be helping yourself. A new contract brings much promise today. A physical attraction could turn into a lasting soul-mate partnership. If you are already married, your relationship will deepen. If you keep a notepad near you while you sleep at night, you will be able to review your dreams. You will be gaining some insights that will help you to contemplate your future. Don't be too surprised to find helpful information for your friends as well. Your ability to visualize new directions will help you realize your goals.

Sagittarius (November 22-December 21)

Two-way communication should be the accent of this mentally stimulating day. Your mind is alive and curious and your lucidity will lead to easy understanding by others. Everyone in your workplace seems agreeable and willing to meet on common ground in order to come up with some kind of new working code or guidelines. Studies to identify the shortcuts that can be inserted in order to help eliminate frustrations and slowdowns are bound to be positive. This is an excellent day for group discussions that lead to good decisions. This is a busy time; business travel is possible soon. Enjoy your evening with friends. A faraway lover misses you and may contact you. Relax and enjoy some quiet times before you retire for the night.

Capricorn (December 22-January 19)

Finish rather than start. Today you have the mental concentration and discipline to work out the final details of a past project, but you are not up to blocking out the broad borders of a new project. You may find yourself drawn more inward than outward these days. You might do better in service capacities than in leadership for now. Now and over the next few years-you have the power to influence people-no matter what position you play. Special people just stand out in special ways and you are as you appear-honest, intelligent and willing to help others. If you are single, think about inviting yourself to a gathering or set up a little party of your own. Perhaps a group of your friends are meeting on the boardwalk or in town.

Aquarius (January 20- February 18)

It is good to keep track of your learning curve as well as how well you improve in your work progress. While it is true that you have much to offer to others at work, it is also true that if you offer your assistance twenty-four hours a day you can exhaust yourself needlessly. A little tempering of your need to be helpful would help your stress level. Your goals and objectives are very clear today and you proceed, not only with self-confidence, but with a clear understanding of the material resources and detailed hard work necessary to achieve them. If others are involved in your goals, you could accept a leadership role; otherwise, you prefer to work alone. Jazz may be your choice of music and with a special group in town you may enjoy being with friends.

You greet this day with a great deal of enthusiasm and a smile-enjoy the day. Take care with impulsive moods-it could lead to unwise choices. A volunteer project, whether at work or some other place, gets a successful start with your influence. If there is a push to sign contracts, make or give loans, etc., delay the action until another day. Some quiet time at home will help you to relax before a big party this evening. If you are sprouting herbs for indoor beginnings, try peppermint and dandelion. On reflection of a past class or book you may realize that you should give your gardening talent more attention. A social get-together or party this evening is the perfect touch for your special day.

Amber gives Chyna advice on love mber Rose has been giving Blac Chyna relationship advice. The 27-year-old model recently started dating reclusive reality TV star Rob Kardashian, 28, and Amber revealed she and Blac rely on each other for advice when it comes to love. She told Mirror Celeb: "I think us being best friends we give each other advice, it's not just me schooling her. "We've both learned a lot from our past relationships and the mistakes we've made in life and the good things we've done in life. "We're very loving and compassionate girls. I feel like people don't really know that about us. We love really hard. We're good people. We learn as we go." Until recently, Amber had an acrimonious relationship with some of Rob's siblings as her ex Kanye West is now married to Rob's sister Kim Kardashian West. However, Amber and Kim recently put their differences behind them and Blac is reportedly so impressed she is hoping she can iron out her differences with Rob's younger sister Kylie Jenner, who is dating her ex-fiancÈ Tyga. An insider said: "Blac Chyna thinks what Amber and Kim did was a real mature thing to do. Blac Chyna would like to do the same with the Kardashian family. "She would really like to talk to Kylie. She is fine with Kylie and Tyga dating at this point. She hopes they understand how she felt when it all happened between Tyga and Kylie."

Stewart inspired Wood to have more children

R od Stewart claims he inspired Ronnie Wood to have more children. The 71-year-old rocker has taken the an older dad to young kids himself as he has sons Alistair, Credit for his 68-year-old former Faces bandmate and his wife Sally Humphreys deciding to start a family, revealing he and his spouse Penny Lancaster talked them into it. Rod said: "I must admit it was me and Penny that was pushing for them to have children - I'm sure Sally wanted them but she just needed a spokesman and she got it in me." And the 'Maggie May' singer can't help but be amused at the thought of how much his old pal's life is going to change when he becomes a dad to twins very soon. Speaking on UK TV show 'Lorraine', he added: "He doesn't know what's going to happen to him. I laugh every time I

10, and Aiden, five, with Penny. Ronnie is already father to four grown-up children, son Jesse - his son with first wife Krissy - and Leah, Tyrone and Jamie whom he raised with second spouse Jo Wood. Rod has previously suggested The Rolling Stones guitarist should have a vasectomy once his twins enter the world so he cannot procreate any more. He quipped: "I have not had the snip. Ask Ronnie Wood, he should have the snip. I don't know what comes out when you have the snip. I think it is just dust."

Chris Klein to be a dad

hris Klein is to become a father for the first time. The 'American Pie' actor revealed the happy news that he and wife Laina Rose Thyfault - who he wed last August - are expecting a baby together on his 37th birthday yesterday. Sharing a photo of Laina's bump on Twitter, he wrote: "My beautiful wife Laina and I are expecting our first child. "23 weeks along. Gratefully blessed on my 37th B-Day." Chris previously admitted he was "very grateful" to have married Laina. "Laina looked beautiful. She holds herself with such grace. I am a very grateful man." The newlyweds decided to get married at the Rainbow Ranch in Montana, even though they're both originally from Texas. Chris previously explained: "We fell in love with the area and the nature. Luckily, we have families who love to travel and also love nature, so it was the perfect spot for us." The Hollywood hunk - who was previously in a relationship with 'Batman Begins' actress Katie Holmes - first met Laina at a mutual friend's wedding and proposed to the blonde beauty in Venice Beach, California, back in December 2014.

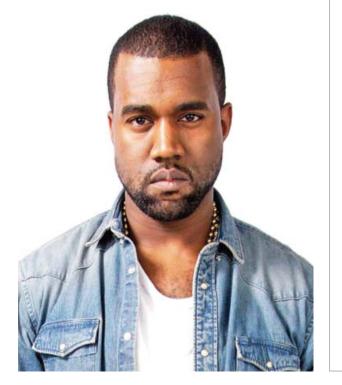

Woodley doesn't watch movies

he 'Divergent' actress may have carved out a successful career by starring in a number of successful movies but she has admitted she prefers to snuggle up with a book after a long day on set rather than get engrossed in a movie. She explained: "I don't really watch any other things. I don't know how people find time to watch movies. I would love to watch more. At the end of the day it's either watch movies or read a book and generally the novel wins." But, if the 24-year-old star does find the time to slip on a film, she prefers to watch her movies because she can critique her performance in order to improve for her next role. She said: "I don't know if it's enjoyable but it's something I'm grateful for. It's a way of critiquing what I do, so I know better for the next round how I can adjust and grow my strengths." Shailene shot to fame after she starred in 'The Fault in Our Stars' as cancer patient Hazel Grace Lancaster in 2014 and, despite her down to earth attitude to life, she has admitted she was concerned fame would go to head and ruin her life. Speaking to the Metro newspaper, she said: "I think at first I

West is considering joining Instagram

he 'Bound 2' hitmaker - who is known for his dramatic outbursts on Twitter - is toying with the idea of making an account on the photo-sharing site but under the condition his fans don't bombard him with requests on what to post. Taking to his Twitter account last night, he said: "I was thinking about getting an Instagram but only on one condition..... no one can ask me or try to tell me what to Instagram... It's my art... "My tweets are a form of contemporary art only compromised by people trying to tell me what to tweet and not to tweet... Non artist trying to grab the paint brush... (sic)." The 38-year-old rapper's teasing remarks come just a week after his wife Kim Kardashian West, with whom he has two children North, two, and Saint, three months, attempted to break the internet by posting a raunchy selfie on the site. The brunette beauty, 35, was slapped with backlash after she uploaded the raunchy shot - her completely naked with two slim black bars strategically placed across her breasts and private parts - online. And this isn't the first time Kim has shocked her fans with a seductive picture as she also pulled a similar stunt shortly after giving birth to her baby girl North two years ago.

Cage skips the SXSW due to illness

icolas Cage skipped the SXSW premiere of his movie 'The Trust' after suffering dizziness and high blood pressure. The 52-year-old star was heading to Austin, Texas for the annual film and music festival but suddenly fell ill and was forced to cancel his appearance at the screening. A spokesman for SXSW said: "This was definitely unforeseen. He had dizziness before boarding and they checked his blood pressure, which was high." The 'Face/Off' actor was checked over by airport medical staff at Las Vegas, where he was due to take off in time to attend the premiere on Sunday at the Arts & Cinema Centre, but it was decided he shouldn't get on the flight, though he is now on the road to recovery. A representative for the star added: "We all felt it was better for him not to get on the plane since flying could make things worse. Thankfully he is now much better." The event was instead attended by co-star Elijah Wood and pop star Sky Ferreira, who has a supporting role in the movie, which is about corrupt cops who plan to rob a vault full of drug money. Meanwhile, Nicolas has just signed up to star in crime thriller 'Vengeance: A Love Story' in the role of a vigilante cop, and is set to start shooting later this year.

Elba has 'good grasp' of himself

dris Elba finally has a "good grasp" of who he is. The 43-year-old actor - who has children Isan, 14, and Winston, 23 months, from past relationships - had a good time when he was younger but lacked direction in his life, and now he is secure in himself, he is having "real fun". He said: "I had a lot of fun in my 20s but I didn't really know what I was doing in my life back then. I started to grow into myself in my 30s. Now in my 40s, I have a really good grasp of who I am. It's more interesting when you feel things are falling into place. That's where the real fun comes from." The 'Jungle Book' actor credits his parents for helping him stay out of trouble while growing up in a deprived part of London. He said: "I had parents who were very protective and looked out for me. The 'We Belong Together' hitmaker sent her assistants to a nearby shop to buy a stack of Disney DVDs for her fouryear-old twins Moroccan and Monroe as she rehearsed for her upcoming tour date in the Scottish capital. A source told The Sun newspaper: "Mariah didn't land in Glasgow until 10pm and went straight to the arena to get everything ready for tonight. She told her entourage to make sure the children - who were being cared for by a nanny while she did her thing on stage - had a huge stack of DVDs they could choose from. "She specially told them to stock up on the most recent Disney flicks, including the Minions films, and warned no movies with violence. The kids headed back to the hotel at 4am, before Mariah herself rocked up an hour later. She slept pretty much all day yesterday and barely left her suite." And whilst she ensured her children had the best of everything, no expense was spared for herself either as she rented the penthouse suite at a five-star hotel in the city. From ninja to elder statesman: Japan techno king Ken Ishii apan's techno trail-blazer Ken Ishii rocks huge crowds the world over and leads a glamorous, jet-set life-but the superstar DJ insists he's a "bit of a nerd" at heart. Ishii, 45, burst onto the dance scene more than 20 years ago and has scooped up MTV awards, composed the theme song for the 1998 Winter Olympics and even appeared on the cover of Newsweek magazine. But new album "Leaps", released last week under his alter ego "Flare" and which draws heavily from 1980s influences Kraftwerk and Japan's Yellow Magic Orchestra, reveals a more introverted side to the Sapporo-born artist.

"Flare is more personal and experimental," Ishii told AFP in an interview. "It's like getting a new toy." But while he feels a sense of liberation, there is also a buzz of nostalgia that accompanies a return to "basics" Ishii experienced during his start in the industry as a producer. "My earliest music was experimental so it's like going back to my roots," he said. "I'm still like a kid when I'm in front of my computer. "I guess you could say I'm a bit of a nerd when it comes to the creative process of making music."

Ishii's new 10-track record, which comes 23 years after he cut his first track, is a throwback to the 1980s and marks a subtle departure from his trademark techno voodoo. Industrial beats combine with squiggly synthesizers and video game bleeps to whisk the listener back in time: imagine Kraftwerk, Depeche Mode and an old Atari game console stuffed into a power blender. "When I was seven or eight, the first wave of video games like Space Invaders triggered my interest in electronic sounds," said Ishii, who fondly recalls pinching coins from his dad's pockets to spend at the video arcade after school.

"The album sort of harks back to what I used to listen to in the 80s," added Ishii, who became hooked on techno music after discovering Detroit overlords such as Juan Atkins, Derrick May and Kevin Saunderson. "Electronic music was a big influence, particularly Yellow Magic Orchestra, Kraftwerk and German industrial, new wave stuff. "But for me Detroit techno was like punk music in the late 70s in London-it was a movement."

'Sexy ninja'

Ishii quickly shot to fame after signing to Belgian techno label R&S Records while still at university, tearing up dance floors in Europe before Japan knew what techno music was. "They brought me to Europe for my first ever gig and it was in front of 30,000 people in Amsterdam," he recalled. "Nobody knew me, they were all wondering who this Asian kid was. "I'd only had one warm-up gig before that, in front of about 30 people. They had me come out on stage dressed in all black with these models in sexy ninja costumes."

A No. 1 on the techno chart of British music magazine NME in 1993 was followed in 1996 by an MTV video award for the single "Extra"-both firsts for a Japanese artist. His seminal album "Jelly Tones" came out in 1995 as his stock soared. Then the Japanese Olympic committee called, followed by television commercial work, a movie soundtrack and even offers to act. But at that point, Ishii slammed on the brakes, terminating his record contract and forming his own label in 2002.

"People stopped seeing me as an underground artist because of the commercial success," he said. "The record company was pushing me to release hit after hit, to use female singers-stuff that had nothing to do with techno. "I didn't want to cross that line, to sell out. I wanted to go back to the underground. I'm an old-school guy." Ishii has a philosophical attitude towards today's generation of celebrity DJs who fly in for shows by helicopter and plug in pre-programmed sets they often play for an entire festival season.

"People get into this game now to be pop stars," said Ishii, who still gets driven to gigs in his manager's battered Toyota. "People are buying tickets to watch a guy who's just standing on stage waving his hands. "I'll have a drink with the promoters and fans after a gig, but maybe some DJs now think it's a waste of time-that more gigs means more money," he added. "I'm not bothered about flashy cars. I don't care how I look when I arrive. I'd still be doing this even if I didn't make any money." — AFP

China buys soft power with hard cash in Hollywood

Sony buys late pop star Jackson's music venture stake

Sony said yesterday it will pay Michael Jackson's estate $750 million for the late pop star's share of a music venture that owns the rights to songs by some of the biggest names in music history. The deal will see the Japanese firm pick up Jackson's 50 percent stake in Sony ATV Music Publishing, which owns several million titles including those written by the Beatles, Marvin Gaye and Bob Dylan. Sony will now control all the of the company, whose catalogue also includes hits by pop star Taylor Swift, rapper Kanye West, Sam Smith and Lady Gaga.

Sony ATV Music Publishing was formed in 1995 by the Japanese elecmaterial. Jackson said he first learned of the music publishing business from former Beatle Paul McCartney, who bought the copyright to songs by Buddy Holly and other classic artists. The Beatles did not show the same business acumen early in their career, however, losing control of their catalogue under the company Northern Songs-which eventually came under ATV.

'Smartest investment in music history' ith cash flowing faster than the Yangtze river, Hollywood is awash with ever-expanding volumes of Chinese funding, but analysts are warning the film industry there's no such thing as a free lunch. The Beijing-based Wanda Group's record-breaking deal in January to buy US film studio Legendary Pictures finally confirmed the long-heralded emergence of the world's second biggest box office as a major player in Tinseltown. The $3.5 billion agreement is the largest-ever cultural takeover by China, with US studios keen to capitalize on its burgeoning cinema market at a time when Beijing is pushing entertainment as a source of "soft power."

Legendary, the maker of "Jurassic World." "Godzilla" and the latest Batman trilogy, has grossed more than $11 billion worldwide since it was founded in 2005, mostly with the kind of big-budget blockbusters popular with Chinese audiences. "It's a win-win situation... because the China market is really incredibly taking off and Hollywood has a real interest in that," Stanley Rosen, a political science professor at the University of Southern California, told AFP. It is an arrangement that benefits both sides financially, with movies becoming increasingly expensive to produce but the Chinese hungry for Western-made films.

But China, which has yet to make a global hit, is also buying expertise. "Hollywood has what China lacks, which is storytelling ability, marketing, distribution," Rosen told AFP. Wanda owner Wang Jianlin, who burst into the international spotlight in 2012 by buying US cinema chain AMC Entertainment for $2.6 billion, says the Legendary deal makes his company the highest revenue-generating movie unit in the world. It also gives future Legendary films direct access to China's booming market, which has become crucial to foreign filmmakers, with North American ticket sales stagnant. PricewaterhouseCoopers has projected China's box office to rise from $4.3 billion in 2014 to $8.9 billion in 2019, meaning it would outstrip the US within two years.

Phenomenal growth

In 2014, 8,035 movie screens — 22 per daywere installed in China and the screen count stood at 31,627 by the end of 2015, according to official sources. Underlining the shift in power, Chinese box office monitor EntGroup announced that cinemas took a record $1.1 billion in February-a 70 percent year-on-year jumpovertaking the North American monthly revenue for the first time in history. The main driver of Chinese cinema's phenomenal growth is a steady emergence of a modern consumerist lifestyle among China's burgeoning middle class, expected to account for 75 percent of households within a decade.

Cumulative Chinese investment in the US since 2000 reached $63 billion in 2015, with a $4 billion going to the entertainment industry, according to research firm Rhodium Group. The trend looks set to accelerate, with Huayi Brothers planning to produce at least 18 films with LA studio STX Entertainment, and Shanghai-based Fosun International taking a stake in US media company Studio 8. Both Wanda and tech firm Alibaba have been touted as possible minority investors in Paramount, while Hunan TV has signed a $1.5 billion deal to fund Lionsgate movies and Perfect World Pictures is investing $250 million in Universal's slate over five years. Beijing has pushed back against an invasion of "foreign culture," however, issuing an edict in 2011 discouraging movies featuring "fantasy' and "time travel" among other "bizarre plots." President Xi Jinping has instructed artists to abandon "naive sensual amusement" and instead promote "true-to-life images to tell people what they should affirm and praise." Only 34 foreign films are given cinema releases in China each year under a quota set by Beijing, and all are subject to official censorship over content deemed politically sensitive or obscene.

Litmus test

Co-produced movies can bypass the quota as long as they contain significant Chinese elements, such as characters, plot devices or locations. But the strategy has backfired at times, most notably with "Transformers: Age of Extinction," which was derided for depicting characters drinking the Chinese version of Red Bull in Texas. Jonathan Landreth, managing editor of the New York-based online magazine China File, warned in a recent article that Wanda and Legendary were operating under Jinping's "looming encouragement" and said the deal could not have gone ahead without the approval of China's Communist Party.

"While Wanda invests in Hollywood to make money, the deal sees Legendary unwittingly becoming one of the most powerful channels for Beijing's worldview, a worldview that bars open discussion of the jailing of dissidents and the disappearing of booksellers," he wrote. The first co-production from the Wanda-owned Legendary will be the $150 million sci-fi action movie "The Great Wall," starring Matt Damon, Willem Dafoe and Hong Kong Cantopop singer and actor Andy Lau. Directed by Chinese filmmaker Zhang Yimou and due for its China release in December, two months ahead of the US opening, the film will be entirely English-language.

Christopher Spicer, a film financing expert and partner at international law firm Akin Gump, said the film, the most expensive ever shot in China, could serve as a litmus test of public appetite for Chinese-American joint projects. "I've been doing film and television for eight or nine years and at different times in history primary funding sources of film and, to a lesser extent, television have come from different countries all over the world," he told AFP. "But certainly for the time being I would expect the trend of Chinese financing to continue." — AFP

tronics giant and the late "King of Pop", who transformed music with iconic hits including "Thriller" and "Beat it". Jackson died in 2009 at the age of 50. His estate said it will still own his master recordings and the publishing company that owns all the songs he penned. It will also keep its stake in EMI Music. The singer, a notoriously profligate spender, turned to music publishing rights at the height of his stardom as he looked for a place to invest his burgeoning fortune.

The proceeds from the catalogue offered vital revenue for the star later in his life as he struggled to pay his expenses and released little new Australian tycoon Robert Holmes a Court. The deal "is considered one of the smartest investments in music history", Jackson's estate executors said yesterday. In the negotiations, the businessman insisted on excluding a song from the deal so he could give it as a present to his teenage daughter. Catherine Holmes a Court was given the copyright to the song "Penny Lane," which she continues to own today, one of the few Beatles' tracks not part of ATV. McCartney was friendly with Jackson, collaborating on the track "The Girl is Mine" off "Thriller," but was unsuccessful in bids to wrest control of the Beatles catalog. Jackson sold half of the stake in ATV to Sony in 1991 for a reported $100 million.

His will called for his mother Katherine and his three children-Prince, Paris and Blanket-to be supported, although not his father Joe Jackson, whom he had accused of abuse. Yesterday, Sony said the deal underscored a focus on its entertainment division, which includes a music label and Hollywood studio. The company has been leaning on movies, music and soaring sales of the PlayStation video game console in its bid to scrap years of eye-watering losses linked to the consumer electronics that built its global brand. "The entertainment businesses have long been a core part of Sony and are a key driver of our future growth," Sony chief executive Kazuo Hirai said.—AFP

row pulls out of Europe tour

Nazi salute at a concert has pulled out of a European tour even after a French festival came under fire for standing by him. A regional government in western France had cut off subsidies to Hellfest due to the festival's refusal to scrap a performance by Down, a New Orleans-based metal band led by Phil Anselmo. The singer has apologized after giving a Nazi salute and shouting "White Power!" at a charity concert in Los Angeles in January that was packed with musical celebrities.

Anselmo, best known as the former singer of the band Pantera, profusely thanked Hellfest's director Ben Barbaud in an open letter but said it was not the right time to tour. "My AWFUL mistake has taken a toll on my reputation, and justly so!" he wrote, crediting Barbaud with "know(ing) me better than this drunken incident could ever describe." "I BEG YOU, give me this time to get my brain clear, and to come back (if you will have me back) next year, my brother, I implore you!" he wrote. Anselmo said he was also suffering from a recurring knee injury and needed rehabilitation.

A member of Down's management on Monday confirmed the letter's authenticity and said the band would not tour Europe, but declined further comment. Besides Hellfest, the band

US metal singer who gave a was scheduled to play at the Download festival's editions in both England and the Paris region, as well as metal events in Belgium and Italy. The only upcoming date remaining on the band's schedule is in Las Vegas. Barbaud had criticized Anselmo's actions at the Los Angeles show but said the singer had performed seven times at Hellfest without incident.

"I know him and he has a provocative personality which has nothing at all to do with anti-Semitism," Barbaud told AFP at the time. The government of the Pays de la Loire region cut funding to Hellfest over Down's inclusion, although it had contributed only 20,000 euros ($22,000) to the annual festival's 16-million-euro ($17.8 million) budget. "It is out of the question for the regional council uncritically to accept that incitement to racial or religious hatred take place on the stages it finances," said Laurence Garnier, head of the region's cultural commission. Anselmo has long faced allegations of racism and Pantera has incorporated the Confederate flag into band artwork. He had initially played down his "White Power" remark, saying he had been making an inside joke about band members drinking white beverage. — AFP

'Midnight Special' is an electrifying mystery

idnight Special" is one of those rare, stimulating creations that grabs you and penetrates your bloodstream from start to finish. This unique tale about a kid with special powers skillfully melds mood and story, giving the entire experience the feel of a thrilling getaway chase one that you're part of, too. Director Jeff Nichols dares you to get in, shut up and come along for the late night drive down some desolate Southern roads where the headlights are optional and the mission is life or death. As with his riveting 2011 breakout "Take Shelter," Nichols doesn't reveal details carelessly. It forces you to pay attention and give yourself to his vision.

Take the first scene. We hear about a child's abduction on a television broadcast. Then we discover that we're with two men (Michael Shannon as Roy and Joel Edgerton as Lucas) in a motel room. They're paranoid about something. Then we see a white bedsheet draped over the outline of what appears to be a child, and you realize you're with the abductors. It's an unsettling milieu. But then Roy removes the bedsheet to reveal a child (Jaeden Lieberher) who is neither scared nor upset. He's calm. He's wearing noise cancelling headphones and pool goggles and there's even ordinariness about it. You realize that Roy isn't evil at all - there's an undeniable tenderness in his empathetic, haunted eyes, and it just makes you want to know more.

The boy's name is Alton and he is, to put it too simply, exceptional. He has powers that no one understands, but that inspire obsession, devotion and fear from those around him. Roy is his father. He's taken his son away from a religious cult led by Sam Shepard's Calvin Meyer, whose service that night is interrupted by federal investigators who have also become interested in the kid. A skeptical, curious NSA agent (Adam Driver) shows up too. The cult has been using Alton as their prophet. He goes into a trance and speaks in tongues and they take it for scripture. What is most compelling to the government, the leaders, and even his father, though, is a date and location that keeps coming up. Friday, March 6. No one knows what will happen then, not even Alton, but they've seen enough to know that it's not worth questioning. But the kooks, the simpletons, the bureaucrats, the scientists, the law, and the devoted parents alike all know that they must go.

Wooden eggs that combine two fashion and decorating trends - color blocking and gold dipping - are arranged in a bowl for an easy Easter display. — AP photos espite their rounded shape, Easter eggs can be edgy. Give them a modern boost by combining two fashion and decorating trends: colorblocking and gold-dipping. I found several different methods online for producing decorative eggs with bold or pastel blocks of color and just enough gold to provide a bit of flair. Piled in a bowl or displayed in a row on a mantle, they're an easy option for spring decorating.

By Holly Ramer

I tested three approaches for cost, ease of execution and overall results. started with wooden eggs purchased from a craft store, and for each technique I made two versions: For one, I layered the gold over a coat of colored paint, and for the second, I applied the gold directly to the bare wood. These techniques would work just as well, however, on papiermache eggs or even real eggshells with the insides blown out.

Acrylic paint

This method is the least expensive and most straight-forward, and probably the easiest of the three to attempt with kids. I used instructions found at a blog called Oleander + Palm. Simply paint the eggs in your desired color, allow them to dry, and then paint one end of each egg with gold paint. Acrylic craft paint is cheap and easy to clean up with soap and water. The downside? The resulting gold color was not quite as vibrant or shiny compared to the other methods, and it did take multiple coats to achieve opaque coverage.

Two wooden Easter eggs decorated using acrylic pain.

Spray paint

This technique, found at Ashley Phipps' website Simply Designing , would be the way to go if you're looking to make a large batch of eggs at one time. It involves using painters' tape to mask off part of the eggs and then spraying them with gold spray paint. That can get a bit messy and should be done outdoors or in a well-ventilated room, but the result is a crisp line and even coverage with minimal effort.

Two wooden eggs decorated for Easter using a product called liquid gilding.

It was a little tricky to apply the tape in a way that resulted in a clean line all the way around the egg, and even a small can of spray paint costs about $5, considerably more than a small bottle of acrylic craft paint.

Liquid gilding

Liquid gilding is a paint-like product that is supposed to produce an effect similar to gold leaf. A small bottle costs about $7, making this the most expensive technique. And because the gilding is solventbased, it must be handled outdoors or in a well-ventilated space. Brushes used to apply it must be cleaned with nail polish remover or enamel paint thinners, which makes it both more expensive and less convenient, and probably not a good option for kids. That said, it was easy to apply and produced a more authentic gold lustre and sheen than the other methods. I found this idea at a Canadian parenting blog, Frugal Mom Eh! — AP
